Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects to decide whether to refer to the Court of Appeal new evidence submitted on 8 June 1993 in relation to the conviction of four persons for the murder of Carl Bridgewater in 1978.

Mr. Maclean: A number of representations on behalf of those convicted in this case were received between June 1993 and April 1994. We understand that more may follow. We have asked the police to make inquiries into some of the matters raised. When those inquiries have been completed and any further representations have been considered, my right hon. Friend will consider in the light of all the information available to him whether it would be right for him to refer any of the convictions to the Court of Appeal or to take any other action.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which factors he is considering as part of the new evidence submitted to him on 8 June 1993 in relation to the conviction of four persons for the murder of Carl Bridgewater in 1978 before determining whether the case should be referred to the Court of Appeal.

Mr. Maclean: All the matters raised in the latest series of representations will be taken fully into account before any decision is taken on whether to refer any of the convictions to the Court of Appeal.

Weapons

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many weapons were voluntarily surrendered to the police in each year since 1979.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No central record is kept of the numbers of weapons surrendered to the police. The available information is that the national firearms amnesty held in 1988 resulted in over 47,000 guns being handed in. Local operations by seven police forces in Great Britain resulted in the surrender of 7,494 bladed weapons in the three years from April 1990 to March 1993.

British National Party

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on why police officers provided the defeated British National party candidate in Tower Hamlets with a police escort at the count when reporters wished to put questions to him; and how many officers were involved.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Commissioner that two officers escorted the British National party candidate, Mr. Derek Beackon, when he left York Hall, Bethnal Green after the announcement of the election result. Supporters and opponents of the British National party had gathered outside the building and the police were concerned that Mr. Beackon's appearance there might result in a breach of the peace.

Court of Appeal

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what have been the changes in the last five years for which figures are available for the number of civil servants within his Department working full time on considering new evidence in relation to convictions for serious criminal offences where he has to make a decision on whether to refer such cases to the Court of Appeal.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the table:

Staff engaged in considering alleged wrongful convictions and related matters

Elections

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the situation in respect of the description of candidates on ballot papers during local, parliamentary and European elections to reduce possible confusion as to the political party affiliations of candidates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have at present no plans to do so.

Life Sentences

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases of current life sentence servers the judge's recommended minimum imprisonment has been increased by the Home Secretary by (a) less than five years (b) five to 10 years and (c) more than 10 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information in the form requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. For the readily available information I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Jarrow (Mr. Dixon) on 3 March 1994 Official Report, columns 830-31.

Prisons (Hospital Visits)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each HM prison and remand or detention centre in (a) South Yorkshire, (b) North Yorkshire, (c) West Yorkshire and (d) Humberside how many hospital visits have been allowed to prisoners in each year since 1985; and if he will show the hospitals attended.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 5 May 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 12 May 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about hospital visits since 1985 by prisoners in South Yorkshire, North Yorkshire, West Yorkshire and Humberside.

Central statistical information about visits to NHS facilities details only the number of visits or transfers, not the hospital attended. The available information is shown in the attached tables, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

SCOTLAND

Conservation

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many proposed Ramsar sites there are in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: There are at present 48 sites in Scotland proposed for designation under the Ramsar convention. In addition, 18 sites have already been formally designated.

Homelessness

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how he intends to address the question of homelessness in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have today placed in the Library of the House copies of a consultation paper entitled "Tackling Homelessness". This follows the publication on 29 March of a research report dealing with the operation of the 1991 code of guidance on homelessness in Scotland. The consultation paper takes into account the results of this research and sets out a range of specific questions about the way in which the present framework of legislation on homelessness is interpreted and applied in practice by local authorities.

The primary statutory responsibility for dealing with homelessness lies with local housing authorities and there is no intention of changing this arrangement. At present there are essentially two methods of acquiring a tenancy with a local housing authority—either by making a direct application to the landlord concerned, and usually going on the relevant waiting list until a suitable property becomes available, or by being accepted as unintentionally homeless and in priority need by a local housing authority—in which case the authority has a duty to secure long-term accommodation for that household.

There is a considerable overlap between these approaches. It is known from the code of guidance research that in the six local authority areas studied, around 31 per cent. of homlessness applicants were already on a general waiting list. In 1992-93, 24 per cent. of all new housing authority lets in Scotland were to homeless households.

I am concerned to ensure that there are no legislative or other barriers which may prevent local housing authorities arriving at a suitable balance between the needs of different groups of applicants. One of the purposes of this consultation is therefore to find out whether such barriers exist in Scotland and, if so, to decide how they can be overcome. Consequently the consultation paper sets out a number of questions for discussion on this and other related issues which need to be addressed by local authorities, Scottish Homes and other housing agencies.

The Government's overall aim is to achieve a fair and effective system for meeting the housing needs of those who rely on rented housing in both the public and private sectors. I intend to review the results of this consultation very carefully before bringing forward any proposals to change or reform the basis for homelessness provision in Scotland. At this stage, I look forward to a helpful and constructive response to the consultation paper which is being circulated to all Scottish hon. Members and to a wide range of housing interests.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Mobile Telephones and Pagers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) portable telephones, (b) pagers and electronic bleepers and (c) car telephones are currently used by her Department; what are the annual costs of operating this equipment; and to which personnel it is made available.

Mr. Jack: The Ministry and associated agencies currently have approximately 1,200 mobile telephones of various types. This figure includes carphones, but these are normally issued only to Ministers and to some members of senior management.

The Ministry currently has approximately 500 radio pagers, including tone, numeric and message pagers.

The Ministry has centrally arranged call-off contracts for the provision of mobile telephones and radio pagers but financial and procurement responsibility for such equipment rest with local managers. However, total expenditure for service rental and call charges for 1993-94 was approximately £398,855.

The Ministry and its associated executive agencies have a large number of field officers providing service to food, farming and fishing interests. In order that the service can be fast and efficient, these officers need to be able to make contact and be contacted whatever their situation.

Local management evaluate the business need and financial justification and decide which type of equipment is best suited to meet requirements and to whom it should be issued. Financial, technical and procurement advice is provided centrally.

Nephrops Nets

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why the Seahouses fishing vessels Fidelis and Providence were boarded and instructed on his Department's behalf on 5 May to cease using nephrops nets in which the square mesh panel was fitted forward of the flapper; whether the notice issued by district inspector W. P. Bridge about the square mesh panel being placed either forward or to the rear of any flapper had been withdrawn on or before 5 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: A requirement to incorporate square mesh panels in nephrops nets was introduced in 1991 after full consultation with the industry. Experients had shown that these panels, when placed in the net's cod end, any extension piece or immediately in front of any extension piece, allow undersized fish a greater opportunity to escape from nets and grow on to maturity. This is reflected in Statutory Instrument 1991 No. 1380 as amended by Statutory Instrument 1992 No. 1344. The district inspector's notice correctly sets out the essential provisions of these SIs as they relate to North sea nephrops nets. It has not been withdrawn.

FVs Fidelis and Providence were routinely inspected at sea by officers from the fisheries protection vessel HMS Quorn on 5 May. The nephrops nets examined did not appear to the inspecting officer to conform with the requirements of the statutory instruments and the skippers concerned were cautioned.

DEFENCE

Service Personnel (Redundancy)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures have been established for those service personnel who wish to appeal against their selection for compulsory redundancy.

Mr. Hanley: Personnel selected for compulsory redundancy can appeal against the decision through commanding officers, to specially constituted appeal boards. The appeals procedure is explained in the instructions giving details of proposed redundancies and inviting applications for redundancy. If appeals are rejected, personnel can seek redress of complaint in accordance with provisions laid down in the Service Discipline Acts.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the criteria used to select service personnel for compulsory redundancy.

Mr. Hanley: Service personnel have been selected for redundancy in those areas where strengths exceed requirements, taking into account the need to retain a proper balance of age, skills, career structures and levels of experience. Volunteers have been selected wherever possible, but insufficient volunteers in some ranks and specialisations, and the need to maintain career structures, has meant that some compulsory redundancies have been necessary. Over 90 per cent. of those selected for redundancy have been volunteers.

Ex-service Personnel

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Delyn (Mr. Hanson) of 24 March, Official Report, column 366, if he will place in the Library data obtained from voluntary post-exit returns relating to employment among ex-service personnel.

Mr. Hanley: Data from the voluntary returns made by the service personnel after discharge is obtained through the Tri-Service Resettlement Organisation's post-exit survey. I am placing a copy of synopsis No. 3 of the most recently published survey in the Library of the House.

Service Staff Colleges

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he expects to take a decision on the future location of the three service staff colleges;

(2) further to his answer of 6 May, Official Report, column 674, when he expects to give consideration to the future location of the three service staff colleges.

Mr. Hanley: Formal recommendations arising from tthe Defence costs study as a whole will be put before Ministers shortly. It will take some time to consider all the issues involved, but we expect to be able to announce our broad conclusions before the House rises for the summer recess.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been commissioned by his Department into issues relating to the future location of the three service staff colleges; and what were their terms of reference.

Mr. Hanley: The defence costs study into training examined a number of issues relating to the future location of the service staff colleges. Its remit was to identify means for achieving maximum efficiency and rationalisation in individual and specialist training in MOD and the services. The study was to range as broadly as necessary and:

consider where common practices can be adopted across the services explore options for rationalising existing structures and arrangements, identifying any penalties/costs and savings identify timescale for implementation

Research

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the regional distribution of defence research work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The location of defence research work is primarily determined by the availability of facilities, and best value for money considerations. My Department has no plans to change this policy.

Anti-personnel Mines

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce the outcome of the inquiry into the loss of anti-personnel mines from Shoeburyness.

Mr. Aitken: I hope to be able to announce the outcome of this inquiry shortly.

Bosnia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 April, Official Report, column 400, to what extent Greece has agreed to and supported NATO decisions on Bosnia.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply.

Greece has not blocked any NATO decisions on Bosnia, although it disassociated itself from the 9 February decision on Sarajevo.

WALES

Rural Development

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement regarding the internal reorganisation of his Department with regard to the sponsorship of the Development Board for Rural Wales;

(2) if he will make a statement setting out the responsibilities of the regional development division of his Department; and which division of his Department is responsible for rural, tourism and countryside matters.

Mr. Redwood: Following the internal reorganisation of Welsh Office, the regional development division is responsible for sponsorship of the Development Board for Rural Wales, the Wales tourist board and the Welsh Development Agency; and co-ordination of the application of the strategic development scheme within rural areas. RDD has responsibility for general tourism and rural policy matters. The environment division is responsible for sponsorship of the Countryside Council for Wales.

Boreholes

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) by what mechanisms householders in Wales whose homes and gardens are severely damaged by new boreholes sunk by water utilities may obtain compensation; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will call for a report on damage caused to private houses and gardens in the area of Fron, Montgomery as a result of borehole operations by Severn-Trent Water Ltd.; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what assessment he has made of the methods whereby assessment is made of the risk of damage to property in Wales from new water boreholes; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will institute a public inquiry into the conduct of and damage caused by water borehole operations near Fron, Montgomery; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what proposals he has to make water utilities liable for damage caused to property in Wales as a result of the sinking of water boreholes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Flags

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received from (a) organisations and (b) individuals in favour of replacing the Welsh dragon with the Union flag on promotional literature issued by the Welsh development agency.

Mr. Redwood: I have received no such representations. The changes to the promotional literature which I have suggested to the Welsh development Agency are intended to heighten the profile of Wales as a location for inward investment, and there is no question of the Welsh dragon being replaced by the Union flag. Like the hon. Member, I am proud of the dragon and the Welsh colours and wear them wherever possible.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the sea fisheries committees covering the Welsh coastline within the six-mile limit in relation to the continuation of obligations subsequent to Welsh local government reform.

Mr. Redwood: I propose to consult the unitary authorities, after they have been elected in 1995, about their views on the future arrangements for sea fisheries committees. Existing sea fisheries committees would also be consulted.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the payments made in accordance with the Welsh Development Agency redundancy scheme between 1983 and 1989;

(2) if he will list all Welsh Development Agency redundancy payments made in excess of the approved redundancy scheme between 1983 and 1989.

Mr. Redwood: The Department gave approval to redundancy terms for the agency to use in 1983. My Department was not notified of individual payments made during the period 1983 to 1989. I have asked the chairman for details of such payments and I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what written guidance or observations the Welsh Office gave to the Welsh Development Agency regarding the redundancy payment to Mr. Price, the former director of Winvest and WDI; and when it was given.

Mr. Redwood: The Department wrote to the agency on 25 November 1991 when the case of Mr. Price first came to light. The Department subsequently wrote on 19 February 1992 requiring the agency to refer further cases of redundancy to the Department.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance was given to the Welsh Development Agency regarding lease car schemes; when Treasury central unit on purchasing guidelines became available to the Welsh Office; and when these were sent to the Welsh Development Agency.

Mr. Redwood: The Department gave approval to the agency's car leasing scheme on 27 April 1987. Treasury CUP guidelines were issued in November 1990 and those were sent to the agency in February 1992 when it was considering changes to its approved car leasing scheme.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance was given to the Welsh Development Agency between 1983 and 1992 regarding redundancy arrangements after the Welsh Development Agency entered the Mid-Glamorgan pension fund.

Mr. Redwood: The Department wrote to the agency on 12 April 1983 asking for notice of proposed actions on redundancy; details of additional payments; and stating that the terms of redundancy payments must conform to public sector standards.

The Department wrote subsequently, on 29 June 1983, in response to an agency proposal put to the Department on 1 June 1983, giving approval to the agency's redundancy arrangements.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department authorised the payment of moneys for redundancy by the Welsh Development Agency in excess of those authorised by the Welsh Development Agency redundancy scheme.

Mr. Redwood: The Department gave retrospective approval to excess payments identified by the NAO in connection with the agency's 1991-92 accounts.

Tawe Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the National Rivers Authority, Wales region, in relation to falls in salmon and sea trout spawning runs on the River Tawe subsequent to the completion of the Tawe barrage in Swansea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: This is a matter for the National Rivers Authority which has, under the Water Resources Act 1991, a statutory duty to maintain, improve and develop salmon and sea trout stocks. I understand that studies into the effect of the Tawe barrage on migratory fish stocks are continuing.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress achieved in the appointment of a complaints commissioner in relation to the Cardiff Bay barrage groundwater protection provisions.

Mr. Redwood: I expect to make an announcement about the appointment of the independent groundwater complaints administrator shortly.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what instructions he has given to the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation (a) concerning the implementation of the undertakings given in the House of Lords special select committee and (b) in pursuance to the undertakings given in the letter dated 8 March 1993 from David Compton, director of engineering operations for the Cardiff Bay development corporation to Norman Robson, chairman of the Cardiff flood action committee in relation to informing named individual householders in the Cardiff area by post of the date of the start of construction of the proposed Cardiff Bay barrage.

Mr. Redwood: None, but my officials have discussed the issues with officials from the Cardiff Bay development corporation.

Caines Report

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what disciplinary action has been taken against officials at the Welsh Office following the Caines report.

Mr. Redwood: The permanent Secretary considered the findings of the Caines inquiry and concluded that there were no grounds for disciplinary action. I accepted that conclusion.

Rural Affairs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the breaking up of the rural affairs tourism and countryside section of his Department; what proposals he has had for ensuring that rural affairs are not downgraded by alterations in his administrative structure; and what proposals he has for improving co-operation between policy making on rural affairs, tourism and countryside matters.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlisle) today. The new arrangements will facilitate the co-ordination of policies on rural and tourism development throughout Wales and bring together sponsorship responsibility for the relevant agencies. The reorganisation will also provide within a single group comprehensive coverage of conservation, environmental and planning matters.

EDUCATION

Teachers

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the average number of years in employment as teachers of those with relevant qualifications.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table shows the distribution of qualified teachers in service in England and Wales at 31 March 1992, in the maintained nursery, primary and secondary sector, by their length of teaching service.

Percentage of teachers in service for	Type of school
	Primary	Secondary	Total
Under 5	21	16	18
5 – 9	16	16	16
10 – 14	18	20	19
15 – 19	20	22	21
20 – 24	16	15	16
25 and over	9	11	10
Total	100	100	100

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many teachers have taken early retirement on health grounds in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table shows the number of members of the teachers' superannuation scheme who retired on the grounds of ill-health for the financial years 1984-85 to 1993-94. It covers lecturers in further and higher education as well as school teachers.

Financial year	Number of infirmity retirements
1986-87	2,707
1987-88	2,545
1988-89	3,423
1989-90	4,192
1990-91	4,938
1991-92	4,662
1992-93	4,897
1993-94	5,535

The 1993-94 figure represents about 1 per cent. of all teachers and lecturers.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students have become qualified teachers in each of the last 30 years.

Mr. Robin Squire: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the average cost to public funds of a teacher taking early retirement on health grounds.

Mr. Robin Squire: The average pension and lump sum for a teacher retiring on the grounds of ill health during 1992-93 were £7,909 and £23,723 respectively.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many newly qualified teachers entering the profession leave within five years; and what proportion of the total qualifying this is.

Mr. Robin Squire: The data requested are not readily available. However, an analysis produced by the Department suggests that 90 per cent. of newly qualified teachers enter teaching in England and Wales at some point in the five years after qualifying and that 63 per cent. are in service at the five-year point after qualifying. Many of those leaving teaching within five years will return at a later date.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many lecturers in further education have relevant teaching qualifications.

Mr. Boswell: The information centrally held on the qualification of FE lecturers is not complete. I will write as soon as possible to the hon. Member with details of the information that is available.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many teachers have taken voluntary redundancy in each of the last 10 years;

(2) what is the average cost to public funds of a teacher taking voluntary redundancy.

Mr. Robin Squire: Employers of teachers are not required to inform the Department which teachers seek or acquiesce in dismissal on grounds of redundancy. Information is therefore not available centrally about the numbers of teachers concerned or costs.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many newly qualified teachers have not entered the teaching profession in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The data requested are not readily available. However, the table shows the destination of teachers qualifying from the university sector in 1993. Further details for the university sector are available from the Universities Council for the Education of Teachers.

Destination, as at December 1993, of teachers completing initial training in the summer of 1993 at universities in England and Wales.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many teachers are currently employed in local education authority or grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: In January 1993, 396,332 full-time equivalent teachers were employed in the maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools sector in England, including LEA and self-governing—GM—schools and sixth-form colleges.

Departmental Advertisements (Complaints)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will place in the Library a copy of his response to the Advertising Standards Authority reports on the recent complaints concerning his Department's advertisements relating to grant-maintained status when that report is made available.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 27 April 1994, Official Report, columns 193-94. Once the outcome of the ASA's investigations is published, which is expected within the next week, a copy of the Department's response to their investigations will be placed in the Library.

National Curriculum Review

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the estimated total cost of Sir Ron Dearing's review of the national curriculum; what is the total cost to date; and if he will provide a detailed breakdown of such costs.

Mr. Robin Squire: The estimated total cost to date is £1·3 million, comprising:

(i) £755k for the interim and final Dearing reports on the National Curriculum; and

(ii) £528k for work on slimming down the curriculum by the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority (SCAA) and its advisory groups (excluding SCAA's internal staff costs).

The eventual cost of the current consultation on the revised curriculum proposals is estimated at about £2 million, which includes the cost of publishing and distributing the consultation documents and a report on the outcome of consultation.

Funding Agency for Schools

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals he has in respect of the eligibility of the Funding Agency for Schools to continue to operate in local education authority areas under redrawn boundaries where it has been established under existing boundaries.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend would need to consider this matter in the light of the individual circumstances applying in the new LEA areas.

Sport

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the time given to sport in the national curriculum, following the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority's review.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has no power to specify how much time should be allocated to physical education or any other national curriculum subject. This is a matter for individual schools. However, the national curriculum as proposed is expected on average to free up the equivalent of 20 per cent. at key stages 1, 2 and 3 and 40 per cent. at KS4. This is to allow more scope for teachers to exercise their professional judgment.

ENVIRONMENT

Businesses (Compensation)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision exists for businesses to claim compensation for loss of business due to (a) road works and (b) works associated with water supplies; and what plans he has to change these provisions.

Mr. Baldry: Compensation for loss of business due to development by a public authority, or other body acting under statutory powers, is assessed in accordance with the land compensation code, specified for England and Wales principally in the Land Compensation Acts 1961 and 1973, the Compulsory Purchase Act 1965 and the Planning and Compensation Act 1991. One of a series of official booklets on the compensation code deals with the position of businesses affected by public development. I am sending a copy to the hon. Member.

The compensation code was thoroughly reviewed prior to the introduction of important changes in the 1991 Act. My right hon. Friend has no proposals for further amendment.

Properties, Redditch

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the sale by the Commission for New Towns of the freeholds of properties in Redditch to Burford Estates and Shenstone Properties;

(2) what assessment he has made of the extent to which the sale by the Commission for New Towns of the freeholds of properties in Redditch to property developers is in accordance with Government policies to encourage home ownership and affordable housing.

Sir George Young: Throughout the 1980s, the leaseholders of residential properties in Redditch had the opportunity to purchase their freeholds, with specific mailshots being made in both 1985-86 and 1989-90. Following this, in accordance with the Commission for the New Town's statutory remit to dispose of its assets for the best price reasonably obtainable, the freeholds of the remaining properties were advertised on the open market and were sold in two blocks on the basis of tenders received. Most leaseholders of houses have the right to enfranchise under the Leasehold Reform Act 1967 which sets out the basis for a fair price to be determined with provision, in the event of a disagreement, for either party to refer the matter to the local leasehold valuation tribunal.

Urban Regeneration

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he will be taking nationally and regionally to ensure that a target proportion of the single regeneration budget is used to support (a) voluntary sector run projects and (b) black and ethnic minority projects.

Mr. Baldry: The single regeneration budget is intended to be a locally responsive source of funding for regeneration. There is therefore no fixed, centrally determined quota or target for the support of particular activities.

The bidding guidance for the single regeneration budget makes clear that one of its objectives is to "promote initiatives of benefit to ethnic minorities"

and that bids should also aim to

"harness the talents and resources of the voluntary sector and volunteers and involve local communities".

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what decision he has made on how single regeneration budgets will be assessed in terms of the level of involvement and partnership with the voluntary sector.

Mr. Baldry: The bidding guidance for the single regeneration budget, released on 14 April, copies of which are in the Library of the House, says that bids should "aim to harness the talents and resources of the voluntary sector and volunteers and involve local communities".

Bids will be judged against the criteria set out in the checklist at annex A of the guidance.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will appoint regional advisers at the 10 new regional integrated offices to advice on the strategy for supporting and developing black and minority ethnic programmes and projects under the single regeneration budget.

Mr. Baldry: A key objective of the single regeneration budget is to "promote initiatives of benefit to ethnic minorities"

and projects which benefit individuals will be monitored to ensure that all those intended to benefit, including ethnic minorities, do so. In addition, each regional office will have a senior official from the Home Office to provide advice on issues for which the Home Office has the lead policy responsibility.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce a scheme whereby licensees of almshouses and properties owned by registered charities will qualify for grants towards the cost of draught proofing and insulation.

Mr. Atkins: My Department is currently considering whether it is possible for the licensees of almshouses to benefit from the provisions of the home energy efficiency scheme.

Eltham Well Hall Site

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet considered the planning application from Safeway for the development of the Eltham Well Hall site in the London borough of Greenwich; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I expect to announce my decision on this application soon.

Housing, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Liverpool Federation of Council Tenants and Residents Associations in respect of the consultation paper, "Access to Local Authority and Housing Association Tenancies"; and what his response has been.

Sir George Young: One of my officials acknowledged on 10 May a letter dated 20 April from the chair of the Liverpool federation which set out the federation's comments on the proposals in the Government's consultation paper, and on certain other aspects of housing policy.

RECHAR

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funds were approved under the RECHAR programme for the provision of a community hall at Widdrington, Northumberland.

Mr. Baldry: A European regional development fund grant of £225,000 was approved under the Tyne and Wear and South East Northumberland RECHAR programme for the provision of a community hall at Widdrington.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg) of 29 April, Official Report, column 379, for what reason the information on youth training recipients and income support is not available.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested by the hon. member for the City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg) is not available because the Department does not collect current data on the income level of youth training participants or on their eligibility for income support. The youth cohort study provides information, on a sample basis, on incomes of certain age groups, but this information is dated and does not establish individuals' entitlement to income support.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Filing Cabinets

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what plans he has to replace Members' filing cabinets in compliance with EU regulations; and what will be the cost.

Mr. Ray Powell: Older four-drawer filing cabinets and those without anti-tilt mechanisms are being identified and replaced as part of agreed refurbishment programmes in order to meet British Standard 4438. A total of £35,000 has been set aside in 1994-95 for this work.

Private Members' Bills

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer of 6 May, Official Report, column 651, what authorisation is required by Parliamentary Counsel to undertake drafting of amendments to Private Members' Bills; and who authorised the drafting of the amendments to the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill which appeared on the notice paper published on Wednesday 4 May.

Mr. Newton: Parliamentary Counsel undertakes drafting work at the request of Ministers. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People authorised his Department to instruct Parliamentary Counsel on the drafting of the amendments tabled on 3 May which appeared on the notice paper published on Wednesday 4 May.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer of 6 May, Official Report, column 651, which Government Department gave instructions to Parliamentary Counsel to draft the amendments to the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill.

Mr. Newton: The Department of Social Security.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Lord President of the Council when the figure of £200 available to assist towards the cost of drafting of Bills of Members successful in the ballot for private Members' Bills was first set; when it was last varied; and what is its value when last set adjusted by the retail price index.

Mr. Newton: Pursuant to a resolution of the House of 29 November 1971, hon. Members who have secured one of the first 10 places in the ballot are entitled to claim not more than £200 towards the cost of drafting assistance for their Bill. This allowance has not been increased since it was introduced; its value adjusted by the retail price index and expressed in March 1994 prices is £1,371.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer of 6 May, Official Report, column 651, what is his estimate of (a) the number of man-hours taken to draft the amendments referred to in his answer and (b) the cost to the Exchequer.

Mr. Newton: Work on drafting of amendments to the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill was carried out in parallel with other work being undertaken by the Office of Parliamentary Counsel, and the time taken cannot be accurately assessed. This work did not involve any additional cost to the Exchequer.

Internet

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans his Department has (a) to use the Internet, (b) to make available on the Internet press releases and other departmental information which the public may wish to have access to and (c) to use the Internet as a means of increasing the openness of his Department.

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council has no plans to use the Internet.

HEALTH

Residential and Nursing Homes, North-East

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds there are in (a) residential homes and (b) nursing homes in the villages of (i) Murton, (ii) Seaham, (iii) Peterlee, (iv) Easington colliery, (v) Easington village, (vi) Horden, (vii) Blackhall, (viii) Shotton, (ix) South Hetton and (x) Haswell; and how many are at present vacant.

Mr. Bowis: The most recent information available centrally relates to 31 March 1993 and is shown in the table. The information on location is based on that supplied by homes and has not been centrally validated.

Durham: staffed residential home places available and vacant and nursing home beds, in certain villages, 31 March 1993

Village	Residential homes		Nursing homes
	Places available	Places vacant	Beds available
Murton	47	5	34
Seaham[1]	169	16	262
Peterlee[2]	72	15	100
Easington colliery	0	0	54
Easington village[3]	59	15	46
Horden[2]	30	2	52
Blackhall	31	8	112
Shotton south[4]	50	1	0

[1]Including Dawdon, Seaham.
One of the homes in Seaham is dual registered.
[2]Horden, Peterlee has been allocated to Horden rather than Peterlee.
[3]Including Easington unspecified.
[4]Including Shotten colliery and Shotten.

Birth Defects

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider funding research into the possible causes of deformed limb birth defects; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Further to my response to an earlier question on this subject from my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 20 April at column 544, the Department is currently considering the question of further research.

Health Trusts (Non-executive Directors)

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the names and full-time occupations of all the non-executive directors appointed to health trusts in each regional health authority in London.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 17 January at column 385. Details of the additions and amendments that apply to the entries relating to London have been placed in the Library.

Isotope Departments and Pathology Laboratories

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those isotope departments and pathology laboratories which are eligible to apply for accreditation by her Department; if she will list those pathology laboratories and isotope departments which have been (a) granted or (b) refused accreditation; and if she will indicate the grounds on which accreditation was refused.

Mr. Sackville: Neither isotope departments or pathology laboratories have to be accredited by the Department. There are several professional accreditation schemes but participation by laboratories is voluntary. Information is not kept centrally on details of applications to these schemes or their outcome. A clinician who wishes to administer—inject into—a human being a radioactive substance is required to hold a certificate, issued under the provisions of the Medicines (Administration of Radioactive Substances) Regulations 1978, before administering such a product. The site where such a clinician is based does not need to be accredited.

East Gloucestershire Health Trust

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will list the principal results achieved by the East Gloucestershire Health Trust since its formation in April 1991; and what it is doing to meet the targets laid down in her "The Health of the Nation" White Paper.

Mr. Sackville: East Gloucestershire national health service trust is a good example of how the NHS reforms are benefiting patients. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Mr. Thompson, the chairman of the trust, for details.

Hospitals, London

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the names and numbers of hospitals which are planned for closure in inner London in the next five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: Proposals for changes to hospital services are developed in the light of discussions between hospitals and local health authorities. Proposals for significant changes in the pattern of services are subject to public consultation. No hospital or hospital department will close unless suitable alternative services are available.

Poverty and Ill Health

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has of the extent of the link between poverty and ill health.

Mr. Sackville: A wide range of factors—including genetic predisposition, environment, exposure to risk, lifestyles—are associated with the incidence of ill health. Some, but not all, of these are linked with income levels. The Department keeps in touch with research developments in this field.

Tuberculosis

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many cases of TB were reported by each region and for England as a whole in (a) 1992 and (b) 1993;

(2) how many deaths from TB occurred in (a) England and (b) each region in 1993;

Mr. Sackville: The information requested for 1992 is shown in the tables. Figures for 1993 are not yet available.

	Tuberculosis notifications – 1992	Tuberculosis deaths
England	5,597	520
North	268	22
Yorkshire and Humberside	498	47
East Midlands	356	50
East Anglia	77	19
South East	2,567	178
South West	199	44
West Midlands	869	84
North West	763	76

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has recently decided that a tuberculosis inter-departmental working group should be established to decide what further prevention and control measures might be necessary to help maintain the United Kingdom's excellent record in combating the disease.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost of drug treatment in primary care for TB in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the table.

Net ingredient cost of antituberculous drugs in England

1989	1,139
1990	1,163
1991	1,363
1992	1,418
1993	1,471

Notes:

1. Antituberculous drugs are contained in the British National Formulary section 5.1.9.
2. The figures for 1991 to 1993 are on a different basis to earlier years and so not directly comparable. The 1989 to 1990 data are based on a sample of 1 in 200 prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors only in England. The data from 1991 cover all prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors, dispensing doctors, and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered in England.

Prednisolone

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations requesting compensation for side-effects she has received from patients who have taken the steroid prednisolone; and what action she is taking.

Mr. Sackville: Several representations have been received from patients who have taken steroids. Separate information is not held on representations made from those who have taken prednisolone. It is not the Department's policy to become involved in individual claims for compensation. This is a matter for individuals themselves to pursue with the companies concerned, if necessary, through the courts, as in other areas of health care.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidelines she has issued concerning the steroid prednisolone and its possible side-effects;

(2) what discussions she has had with the manufacturers of the steroid prednisolone concerning its possible side-effects.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health has not issued specific guidelines about prednisolone. However, prescribing information on prednisolone and other corticosteroids is available to doctors in product data sheets which are produced by the manufacturers and authorised by the licensing authority, and in the British National Formulary" which the Department of Health sends free to all prescribers. These provide extensive warnings about the side-effects of corticosteroids. Specific advice about the risk of immunosuppression in patients taking systemic corticosteroids and the association with disseminated chickenpox was recently sent to all doctors and pharmacists in the bulletin "Current Problems in Pharmacovigilance" volume 20: 1 February 1994, copies of which are available in the Library.

Following a review of the safety of corticosteroids by the Committee on Review of Medicines in the mid-1980s there were communications with the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry—ABPI—and individual companies, as a result prescribing information in product data sheets was revised. In the light of the recent recommendations made by the Committee on Safety of Medicines—CSM—regarding severe chickenpox in association with corticosteroids, the product information available for corticosteroids is being further revised. A large number of manufacturers are involved and will shortly be approached individually in writing on this matter.

GP Fundholders

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the criteria for a GP fundholder removing patients from his or her list.

Dr. Mawhinney: General practitioner fundholders are no different from any general practitioner in this respect.

Smear Tests

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many laboratories report a smear test as cytology negative when no endocervical material has been seen on the slide.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 25 April at column 64.

Primary Health Care

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to ensure equity of income and resources between primary health care in inner cities and elsewhere.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 1 November 1933 at column 60.

Health and Inequalities

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is (a) the remit and timetable and (b) the membership of the new working group on health and inequalities.

Mr. Sackville: The terms of reference and membership of the variations sub-group of the Chief Medical Officer's "Health of the Nation" working group are as follows:

TERMS OF REFERENCE

For the current Health of the Nation key areas:

By spring 1995 to prepare a report for the Chief Medical Officer as to how the Department of Health and the national health service can make best use of existing information in tackling ethnic, geographical, socio-economic and gender variations in health status, with particular reference to the strength of observed relationships and evidence about the effectiveness of interventions.

By the end of 1994 to prepare a report for the departmental research directorate in areas in which new epidemiological and research information is needed to inform the targeting of interventions for high risk groups of the population and further understanding of underlying processes relevant to policy on longer-term intervention.

To support the Public Health Information Strategy with the health variations aspects of its work.

Health Workers

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 15 April, Official Report, column 318, if she will publish a breakdown of the reported 750 redundancies by occupation, gender, ethnic origin and age.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Contraception

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, how many, and what percentage of, women of child-bearing age were registered by general practitioners for contraceptive care in each year since 1990 and in each month since 1 April 1993; and how many women were seen in family planning clinics, in each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: The information on women registered with general practitioners for contraceptive care is not available centrally. For information about attendances at family planning clinics, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 5 May at columns 627-28.

Hospital Stays

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average length of stay in hospital for patients in the surgical specialties.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 6 May at columns 661-62.

Health Service Administration

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of managers and clerical and administrative staff employed by each regional health authority for each year since 1989.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 4 November 1993 at column 458 and the letter sent to him on 30 November 1993 by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State. A copy of the letter is available in the Library.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many senior managers in the NHS there were on each spinel point, 1 to 30; what was the flat salary on each point; what was the annual cost of employment per whole-time equivalent on each point since the introduction of these grades; what was the number of unit general managers in groups one to five, the salary range in each group, and the annual cost of employment per whole-time equivalent on each point since the introduction of these grades; and what was the number of district general managers in groups one to three, the salary range in each group and the annual cost of employment per whole-time equivalent on each point since the introduction of these grades.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State gave him on 27 July 1993 at columns 835-39 and to my subsequent reply on 6 December 1993 at columns 71-72. The tables provide the latest—1993—salary figures for national health service senior managers and unit and district general managers.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing the total amount spent on administration by (a) regional health authorities, (b) district health authorities, (c) special health authorities, (d) family health services authorities, (e) trusts and (f) the Department of Health/NHS executive, in 1993-94, in each case breaking the figure down to show expenditure on (i) salaries and wages and (ii) establishment expenses.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not yet available.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the revenue and capital allocations for regional health authorities in 1994-95.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 26 April at columns 153-56 for revenue allocations for 1994-95. Similar information for capital allocations is shown in the table. Most hospital and community health services capital investment now takes place at national health service trusts. This does not feature in capital allocations made to regional health authorities.

1. Column 2 is the 1994-95 capital allocation for each region as at March 1994.
2. Further sums for specific purposes will be added to allocations during the year.

Employment Safeguards

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what employment safeguards exist for nurses, midwives, or health visitors who publicise misconduct or mismanagement in the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) on 31 March at column 1051.

Ministerial Visits

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 6 May, Official Report, column 665, if she will list those national health service establishments that she or members of her team have already arranged to visit before 9 June.

Mr. Sackville: A number of visits are being arranged but final decisions on whether they take place will depend on parliamentary business and other factors.

NHS Costs

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) doctors, (b) consultants, (c) nurses, (d) administrators and (e) others currently serve in the national health service and at what annual cost; what were the comparable figures in real terms five, 10 and 15 years ago; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 22 March 1994]: The information is shown in the tables. The latest staffing information available is as at 30 September 1992 and the latest expenditure information is for the 1992-93 financial year. Comparable expenditure figures for 1977-78 are not available. The number of managers has been deliberately increased since the mid-1980s—not just since the reforms—because the service was previously undermanaged. Much of the increase arises from the reclassification of existing staff—including many senior nurses—as managers. General and senior managers still account for only 2 per cent. of the total national health service workforce in England and 3 per cent. of the total NHS expenditure on salaries and wages. The number of administrative and clerical staff in clinically-related posts has increased over the last few years in order to free clinical staff to concentrate their skills and experience on direct patient care.

Notes:

[1] All the figures have been independently rounded to the nearest 10.

[2] Medical staff, locum doctors, and locum consultants. Locum consultants cannot be separately identified for 1977, for consistency they are included with doctors for all years.

[3] Medical and dental consultants—but excluding locum consultants.

[4] The nursing and midwifery figures exclude agency nurses and agency midwives. Figures for 1977 are not directly comparable with 1982 and later years due to a reduction in the length of their working week from 40 hours to 37·5 hours. From 1989 Project 2000 nurse training was introduced. To maintain comparability with earlier years the figures for 1992 include 18,300 Project 2000 students. Unlike traditional nurse learners, these students are not employees and are not normally included in workforce figures.

[5] The "Others" figure includes the following staff groups; dental (excluding consultants), professional and technical, professions allied to medicine, scientific and professional, ancillary, maintenance, works, ambulance (including ambulance officers and control assistants), and others who have not been classified elsewhere.

Notes:

[1] The yearly figures for doctors are not directly comparable because the 1982-83 figure for doctors includes expenditure on consultants. Separate figures were not available. For subsequent years separate figures have been provided.

[3] 1987-88 and 1992-93 figures also include general and senior managers following redesignation of staff groups.

[4] "Others" consists of all salaries and wages not included in the four other categories.

[5] Figures for 1992-93 are provisional.

[7] Comparable figures for 1977-78 are not available.

NHS Trusts

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the conveyancing and start-up cost of each wave of NHS trusts.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 5 May 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mr. Raynsford) on 17 May 1993 at column 29 and to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) on 18 May 1992 at column 63. The final amount allocated towards start-up and conveyancing costs for fourth wave trusts was £34,742,000.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Byers: To ask the Attorney-General how many current and former officials and Ministers in his Department have been asked to give written or oral evidence to the Scott inquiry.

The Attorney-General: To date, both I and my predecessor as Attorney-General have been asked to give evidence together with five officials currently in my departments.

PRIME MINISTER

United Nations Security Council

Q6. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if, when he last met President Clinton, they discussed the structure, functions and membership of the Security Council of the United Nations; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The structure, functions and membership of the United Nations Security Council were not discussed during my visit.

Ministerial Visits

Q9. Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Prime Minister when he intends to pay an official visit to Woodspring.

The Prime Minister: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 12 May.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 12 May.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 12 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Tigris and Euphrates Valleys

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what latest assessment Her Majesty's Government have received from medical sources of the latest disease position in the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates, related to defective water-pump and water-filtering equipment.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 21 April, Official Report, column 599. We have not received any subsequent assessments or reports.

Savings Disregard

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Prime Minister what the reasons were for the discrepancy between his oral answer of 5 May, Official Report, column 843, and the answer of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security on 14 March, Official Report, column 480, in respect of the uprating of the savings disregard.

The Prime Minister: There is no discrepancy between my answer on the lower savings disregard and my hon. Friend's answer, which explained the basis of the formula affecting savings held between £3,000 and £8,000. There is no statutory requirement to increase the capital limits as part of the annual uprating of benefits. We keep the limits under review, but there are no current plans for change.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister how many current and former officials and Ministers in his Department, including the Cabinet Office, have been asked to give written or oral evidence to the Scott inquiry.

The Prime Minister: My predecesor and I have both given written and oral evidence to Lord Justice Scott's inquiry. In addition, one serving and one former official have given written and oral evidence relating to their respective service within the Prime Minister's Office and the Cabinet Office, and two former officials have submitted written evidence only.

TREASURY

Disposable Income

1. Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate by how much the typical family's disposable income will change in 1994-95.

Mr. Portillo: Real personal disposable income is expected to rise by 1 per cent. in 1994.

Income Tax

2. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much marginal rates on income tax have changed since 1979; and what evidence he has of the effect on incentives of cutting marginal rates of direct taxation.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Since 1979 we have cut the top rate of tax from 83 per cent. to 40 per cent. and the basic rate from 33 per cent. to 25 per cent. We have introduced a new 20 per cent. rate for those on low incomes. This has improved incentives and encouraged enterprise at all levels.

14. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of total income tax revenue is now paid by the highest 10 per cent. of earners; and what was the proportion in 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: The top 10 per cent. of income tax payers are currently estimated to pay 45 per cent. of total income tax compared with 35 per cent. in 1978-79.

8. Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of people in the United Kingdom who will be paying income tax in 1996.

Mr. Dorrell: Latest estimates suggest that 26·3 million individuals will be liable to income tax in 1996-97.

18. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received in the last four weeks as to the level of income tax.

Mr. Dorrell: I have received a number of representations on the level of income tax.

Taxation

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of earnings was payable by a person on average income married with two children in direct and indirect taxation in 1978-79 and 1994-95.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the information placed in the House of Commons Library as noted in the answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) on 13 April 1989, Official Report, column 620, for estimates, based on illustrative assumptions, of direct and indirect tax payments in 1978-79. Direct and indirect tax payments in 1994-95 will depend on what happens to prices, income and spending patterns.

United Kingdom Economy

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to meet the director general of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the state of the United Kingdom economy.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I will be meeting the Director General of the CBI later this month as part of the regular contact that I maintain with him.

Corporate Taxation

4. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what analysis he has made of levels of corporate taxation in the United Kingdom compared with current levels in other EU member states.

Mr. Dorrell: The rate of corporate taxation in the United Kingdom is kept under frequent review. The United Kingdom continues to provide the lowest rate in the European Union.

Taxation Rates

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received since 1 April regarding increased taxation; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has received a number of representations.

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect the changes in interest rates since 1990 have had on the disposable income, after mortgage payments, of an average family with an average mortgage.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The halving of mortgage rates since October 1990 has reduced interest payments on a typical £33,000 mortgage by about £160 a month.

Income Tax and National Insurance

7. Mr. Streeter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the difference between (a) the total annual amount of income tax and national insurance contributions that it is estimated that a married man on average earnings with two children will pay in 1995-96 and (b) the amount that the same person would pay in 1995-96 under the regimes of (i) 1977-78, indexed and (ii) 1978-79, indexed.

Mr. Dorrell: Income tax and national insurance payments in 1995-96 will depend on the levels of earnings in that year.

If a married man on average earnings with two children paid income tax and national insurance contributions in 1994-95 on the basis of the 1977-78 tax regime indexed to current prices he would be about £930 a year worse off; on the same basis, the 1978-79 regime would make him £690 a year worse off.

21. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax and national insurance was payable on an income of £150,000 last year and in 1978.

Mr. Dorrell: Assuming that all income is earned, that the only income tax allowances and reliefs available are the married man's allowance for 1978-79 and the personal and married couple's allowance for 1993-94, and that class 1 national insurance contributions are paid at the contracted-in rate, the amounts payable were £116,542 in 1978-79 and £56,015 in 1993-94.

Economic Growth

9. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the rate of economic growth in the United Kingdom and that of other EC economies.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The United Kingdom grew faster than any other major European Community country in 1993, and is expected to do so again this year.

30. Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review his forecast of the economic growth rate for the next 12 months.

Mr. Portillo: Publication of the first Industry Act forecast of 1994 is planned for the summer.

27. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest United Kingdom figure for economic growth.

Mr. Portillo: In the first quarter of 1994, United Kingdom gross domestic product grew by 0·7 per cent., to a level 2·6 per cent. higher than a year before. GDP has now grown for eight quarters in succession.

Inflation

10. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current rate of inflation in the United Kingdom, the United States of America, Germany and France.

Mr. Nelson: Headline inflation in the year to March was 2·3 per cent. in the United Kingdom, compared with 2·5 per cent. in the United States, 3·2 per cent. in Germany and 1·5 per cent. in France.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average rate of retail price inflation in each of the last five Parliaments; and what is the current average for the present one.

Mr. Nelson: The average rate of retail price inflation for the last five Parliaments are shown in the table:

Parliament Assembled	Dissolved	Average rate of Retail Price Inflation Per cent.
6 March 1974	20 September 1974	17·0
22 October 1974	7 April 1979	15·2
9 May 1979	13 May 1983	11·5
15 June 1983	18 May 1987	4·8
17 June 1987	16 March 1992	6·4

These compare with a current average of 1·4 per cent. for the present Parliament, assembled 27 April 1992 up to and including March 1994.

23. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made of the impact of non-seasonal sales and special offers on measurements of inflation.

Mr. Portillo: Non-seasonal sales discounts are recorded in the retail prices index in the same way as any other price change, as are special offers that involve a straightforward price reduction. However, some special offers, such as discounts on multi-pack buys or on the next purchase, are not measured in the RPI.

The RPI does not identify the reasons for price changes, so the impact of non-seasonal sales and special offers is not separately distinguishable.

Tax Changes

11. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how much more a married man on average earnings with two children will pay in taxation over the next two years as a result of the changes in taxes announced in last year's Budgets.

Mr. Portillo: Since 1978-79 the real take-home pay of such a family has risen by around £83 a week. What happens to its tax payments and take-home pay in the next two years will depend on what happens to its income and its spending pattern.

VAT

12. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of an average household's income he estimates will be spent on value added tax in (a) 1994-95 and (b) 1995-96.

Sir John Cope: The latest published information shows that VAT paid by households averaged around 6·8 per cent. of household gross income in 1992.

Alcoholic Drink Excise Duty

15. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the change in excise duty on alcoholic drink during (a) 1993-94, (b) 1992-93 and (c) 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: In the March 1992 Budget excise duties on all alcoholic drinks were increased by 4·5 per cent. In March 1993 most of these duties increased by 5 per cent., while the duty on spirits remained unchanged. On 1 January 1994 most alcohol duties increased by 1·9 per cent. but the duties on beer and spirits remained unchanged. Full details are available in the Budget documents and the relevant legislation.

Demand

16. Sir David Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the level of total demand in the economy.

Mr. Portillo: For domestic demand, the most recent figures available are for the fourth quarter of 1993. By then it had risen for seven successive quarters, to a level over 4½ per cent. above its trough in the first quarter of 1992.

Cross-border Shopping

17. Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated loss of duty from alcoholic beverage sales in the United Kingdom for 1993-94 and for 1994-95 as a result of cross-border shopping in the single market.

Sir John Cope: Information on which to base an estimate is available only for the calendar year 1993. Customs and Excise estimate the loss of duty from additional cross-border alcohol sales as £70 million.

Late Payment

19. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about proposals for combating the practice of late payment by large companies to suppliers.

Mr. Portillo: We expect to announce our proposals shortly. These will take account of the responses to DTI's recent consultation paper on prompt payment.

Tax Revenues

20. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the change in the number of full-time jobs on tax revenues.

Mr. Dorrell: I expect tax revenues to increase as the economy strengthens and unemployment falls.

Public Expenditure Debt Interest

22. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of public expenditure debt interest represented (a) in 1979 and (b) currently.

Mr. Portillo: General Government gross debt interest payments accounted for 10½ per cent. of general Government expenditure in 1979-80. The figure in 1992-93 was 6¾ per cent.

Finance and the City Review

24. Mr. Mudie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the timetable for completion of the review of finance and the City.

Mr. Nelson: Work on the industrial finance initiative and the associated programme of consultations will continue tinto the second half of this year. The output from the exercise will, in the first instance, inform our Budget considerations in the autumn.

Public-private Initiative

25. Mr. Berry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of the projects announced in the public-private initiative are under construction; and how many have yet to begin construction.

Mr. Dorrell: Of the projects listed in "Breaking New Ground", published by the Treasury in November 1993, 30 are either completed or under construction. Decisions have still to be taken on some of the remaining projects, but the total value of those currently expected to proceed under the private finance initiative is over £6 billion, or approximately £8 billion if the Jubilee line extension is included.

Unemployment (Cost)

26. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the overall cost of unemployment since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: No accurate estimate can be made of the overall cost of unemployment because any such calcuation is highly sensitive to the assumptions on which it would have to be based.

Russian Economy

28. Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet the managing director of the International Monetary Fund to discuss the Russian economy.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer had a meeting with the Managing Director of the IMF on 24 April before the spring meetings of the IMF and World bank. He discussed many issues during the meeting, including relations with Russia.

Economic Forecasts

29. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest forecast for 1994-95 of (a) the rate of growth of gross domestic product and (b) the rate of inflation.

Mr. Portillo: In the November 1993, "Financial Statement and Budget Report", GDP was forecast to grow by 2·5 per cent. in 1994-95. Underlying inflation, as measured by the RPI excluding mortgage interest payments, was forecast to be 3·25 per cent. in the fourth quarter of 1994. A new forecast will be published in the summer.

Growth, Competitiveness and Employment White Paper

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress being made on follow up work on the Delors White Paper on growth, competitiveness and employment.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Brussels European Council in December 1993 discussed the Commission's White Paper on growth, competitiveness and employment. The presidency conclusions of the Council set out a framework for action, mainly by member states, to tackle unemployment and improve the European Community's competitive position. The main elements of this framework concern structural reform of labour markets; deregulation; completion of the single market; and work on a programme of infrastructure projects—trans-European networks. I welcome the shift in the Community's agenda towards priorities advocated by the Government which this framework represents. The Council of Economic and Finance Ministers will discuss progress on 16 May and 6 June, in preparation for the Corfu European Council. I shall be reiterating the importance which the Government attach to effective implementation of the Brussels European Council conclusions, on a basis consistent with the principle of subsidiarity, and shall be seeking further progress in a number of areas.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the effect of reform of the common agricultural policy on the European Union budget.

Sir John Cope: The effect of reform is to reduce the overall economic burden of the common agricultural policy.

Reform results in payments to farmers based on area of land rather than output produced, and this, combined with a set-aside obligation, reduces the encouragement of surplus production. Area payments to farmers increase budgetary costs, while the accompanying lower support prices reduce consumer and resource costs.

The budgetary costs of CAP reform continue to be met within the agricultural guideline.

Illegal Weapons

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many illegal weapons were seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in each year since 1979.

Sir John Cope: Customs do not hold central records of seizures of illegal weapons prior to 1983. The table sets out the number of illegal weapons seized by Customs and Excise nationally in each financial year since 1983-84.

Firearms Imports

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people (a) were found by Customs to be illegally importing firearms and ammunition and (b) were prosecuted for illegal importation of firearms and ammunition in (i) 1992 and (ii) 1993.

Sir John Cope: Customs do not hold central statistics on the number of people found to be illegally importing firearms and ammunition. The table shows, for 1992 and 1993, the number of: detected irregularities in firearms and ammunition importations; seized firearms; and resulting prosecutions. It is customs policy to take offence action, either by prosecution or compound penalty, when there is sufficient evidence to show that those concerned were knowingly concerned in a fraudulent evasion of United Kingdom prohibitions and restrictions. In all other cases action is restricted to seizure of the goods. The compound penalty procedure is used primarily in respect of non-commercial importations of CS gas canisters or undeclared firearms held for personal security reasons by visiting yachtsmen. These factors account for the low rate of prosecutions resulting from a large number of detections and seizures.

Year	Detections	Firearms seized[1]	Prosecutions
1993	276	8,674	4

[1]The significant increase in the number of weapons seized in 1993 is the result of a small number of major seizures of CS gas canisters and the seizure of a major arms shipment at Teesport in November 1993.

VAT on Fuel

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will now review his policy of imposing VAT on domestic fuel; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: No.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the ratio of public sector employees to employees in the private sector; and what it was in (a) 1979, (b) 1985 and (c) 1990.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested is as follows:

	Ratio of public to private sector employees
Mid-year 1979	1 : 2·4
Mid-year 1985	1 : 2·7
Mid-year 1990	1 : 3·4
Mid-year 1993	1 : 3·5

Relevant information is available in the Central Statistical Office publication, Economic Trends, January 1994—Table C of "Employment in the public and private sectors". A copy is available in the Library.

Public Expenditure

13. Dr. Spink: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his current target for public spending as a percentage of national wealth.

Mr. Portillo: The Government are committed to reducing public spending as a share of national income: the plans that we announced in the Budget in November imply that public spending will fall from 45 per cent. of national income in 1993-94 to 42·5 per cent. in 1996-97.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on the Chancellor's departments within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(2) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on European Communities within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(3) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure new control total by department on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(4) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for the public expenditure new control total and general Government expenditure on the same basis as table 5.2 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(5) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on local authority self-financed expenditure within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(6) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on agriculture, fisheries and food within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(7) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on the legal departments within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(8) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on defence within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(9) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on education within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(10) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on employment within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(11) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on housing, environment, the Property Services Agency and local government within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(12) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on Foreign Office activities and on overseas development within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(13) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on health within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(14) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on the Home Office within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(15) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on Northern Ireland within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(16) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on Scotland within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(17) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on social security within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(18) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on trade and industry and on the ECGD within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(19) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on transport within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(20) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on Wales within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95;

(21) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on the Office of Public Service and Science and on other Cabinet Office expenditure within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget report 1994-95;

(22) if he will publish outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure on the national heritage within the new control total on the same basis as table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 6 May 1994]: Outturn figures for 1993-94 for public expenditure, on the same basis as tables 5B.3 and 5.2 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95", will be published in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1995-96." The table gives the latest estimates for these figures, which are subject to revision and may differ from the eventual published figures.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how much has been paid in disability living allowance to people suffering from back ailments in each of the last three years;

(2) if it is standard practice for people who have applied for disability living allowance because of back ailments to be examined by a chiropractor; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how much has been paid in disability living allowance for each of the last three years;

(4) what proportion and number of people in receipt of disability living allowance suffer from back ailments.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available about the number of people receiving disability living allowance who have a back ailment. Available information dates from April 1993 and relates to people whose main disabling condition is attributable to a back ailment. Currently 8 per cent.—108,000—of DLA recipients have this as their main disabling condition. In 1993-94 we estimate that DLA expenditure on this group was around £200 million.[1]

Disability living allowance was introduced in April 1992. Total expenditure for 1992-93 was £1,973 million and for 1993-94 is estimated to have been £2,505 million.[2]

It is not standard practice for medical examinations to be undertaken in connection with claims for DLA. An independent adjudication officer decides in each individual case what additional evidence, if any, is required to reach a decision on entitlement.

Detective Agencies

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much his Department has spent on contracts with private detective agencies since 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: This Department uses a private company to serve documents in connection with the collection of arrears of national insurance contributions. The cost of the contract for the period April 1991 to March 1994 was £302,461.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the take-up of disability working allowance; and what plans he has to improve the allowance.

Mr. Scott: Disability working allowance was introduced in April 1992. By 30 April 1994, 43,088 applications had been received and 12,416 claims had been successful.

We have announced six changes to improve the benefit. From October 1994 we will introduce a child care costs disregard of £40 which could increase disability working allowance by up to £28 a week. From April 1995 there will be automatic remission of NHS charges for those with savings of £8,000 or less, access to disability working allowance will be extended for those undertaking training for work, the rate for couples and lone parents will be increased from £63·75 to £72·10 a week, the threshold for single people will be increased from £43·00 to £53·75 and we will introduce a disabled child's premium of £19·45 a week.

These are significant improvements to the benefit.

Child Support

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the savings made by the Child Support Agency in its first year of operation excluding (a) those savings made and passed on by the old liable relatives system, (b) moneys passed directly from parent to parent and taken into consideration and (c) those savings brought forward from the Child Support Unit prior to the agency's start-up.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Archy Kirkwood, dated 12 May 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the benefit savings made by the Child Support Agency.

The Agency has so far achieved £335 million in benefit savings in 1993-94. This does not represent the total savings achieved as some will be scored retrospectively. It includes £195 million which arises for maintenance arranged under the old Liable Relative system, and which is not yet the subject of a new CSA assessment.

Some maintenance is collected by the Agency as part of its collection service and some is paid direct between parents. At the end of March the benefit savings figure included £172·9 million which had been paid direct.

I hoipe this reply is helpful.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many maintenance application forms in relation to the Child Support Act 1991 have been issued in Scotland since April 1993 to (a) lone parents on income support, (b) lone parents on family credit, (c) disability working allowance and (d) lone parents not in receipt of social security benefits;

(2) how many maintenance application forms in relation to the Child Support Act 1991 have been returned in Scotland since April 1993 from (a) lone parents on income support, (b) lone parents on family credit, (c) disability working allowance and (d) lone parents not in receipt of social security benefits.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 11 May 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of maintenance application forms issued by, and returned to the Child Support Agency in Scotland.

I am afraid that the figures requested are not available for Scotland separately. Figures are, however, available for Great Britain as a whole. From April 1993 to March 1994 maintenance application forms were issued to 320,400 parents with care on income support, 223,800 parents with care in receipt of either family credit or disability working allowance, and 29,650 parents with care not in receipt of social security benefits. 284,150 maintenance application forms have also been issued to clients who were receiving income support prior to April 1993.

In the same period 626,600 maintenance application forms were returned.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many women in Scotland have claimed exemption under the Child Support Act 1991 because of undue harm or distress; how many have no information about the whereabouts of the father of their child or children; how many are unable to name the father; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many lone parents in Scotland have had their claim for exemption under the Child Support Act 1991 (a) turned down and (b) accepted; and how many have withdrawn their claim;

(3) how many lone parents in Scotland have had a reduced benefit direction made against them under the Child Support Act 1991; and how many have had their benefit cut.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 11 May 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about cases in which the requirement to cooperate provisions of the Child Support Act have been waived or where Reduced Benefit Directions have been issued.

I am afraid that the figures requested are not available for Scotland separately. Figures are, however, available for Great Britain as a whole. From April 1993 to March 1994, 68,400 claims were considered in relation to the requirement to cooperate. Of these, the Agency accepted "good cause" in 15,800 cases where there was the risk of undue harm or distress; in 8,400 cases where the absent parent was unknown, and in 7,500 other cases. Figures are not available for the number of cases where the parent with care has no information about the absent parent's whereabouts.

In the same period, 627 cases were referred to the Benefits Agency to consider the implementation of a Reduced Benefit Direction. Details of the number of cases in which benefit was reduced is matter for the Benefits Agency, and I understand that such information is not available, except at disproportionate cost.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many absent parents in Scotland have been issued with a maintenance inquiry from under the Child Support Act 1991; how many have returned a maintenance inquiry form; how many have been assessed to pay maintenance; and how many have actually paid maintenance to the Child Support Agency or to the lone parent involved.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Dr. Norman A Godman, dated 11 May 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of maintenance enquiry forms issued by, and returned to the Child Support Agency in Scotland, and the number of absent parents who have been assessed for and who are paying maintenance in Scotland.

I am afraid that figures are not available for Scotland separately. Figures are available, however, for Great Britain as a whole. From April 1993 to March 1994, 466,600 maintenance enquiry forms were issued to absent parents, of which 296,600 have been returned. In the same period, 205,500 maintenance assessments were made.

With regard to how many absent parents are paying, the Child Support Computer System records client's details on an individual case by case basis, and it is not currently configured to produce information on the total number of absent parents paying maintenance.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average maintenance payment level in Scotland under the Child Support Act 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 11 May 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the average maintenance level in Scotland.

I am afraid that estimates are not available for Scotland separately. In Great Britain as a whole, however, it is estimated that from April 1993 to March 1994, the average maintenance assessment was £45-£50 a week.

I hope that this reply is helpful.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) lone parents on income support, (b) lone parents on family credit, (c) lone parents on disability working allowance and (d) lone parents not in receipt of social security benefits have received maintenance under the Child Support Act 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 11 May 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about parents with care receiving maintenance.

The Child Support Computer System produces national statistics about the amount of maintenance collected, but it does not relate this to individual cases. An enhancement to provide this is planned for the summer.

I cannot, therefore, yet answer the question in the form in which you ask it, but you may wish to know that by the end of March 1994, the Agency had recorded £210 million maintenance as having been collected. This does not represent the total sum for 1993-94 because some amounts are recorded retrospectively. It also does not include payments made directly by an absent parent to a parent with care where benefit is not an issue.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of (a) absent fathers and (b) absent mothers in receipt of income support who have had a 5 per cent. reduction in their benefit under the provisions of the Child Support Art 1991.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 11 May 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many absent mothers and fathers on Income Support (IS) have had 5 per cent. deducted from their IS under the Child Support Act 1991.

The information is not available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost. To obtain the information would involve a physical examination of every live and closed file currently held; in excess of 12M cases.

The Benefits Agency does not keep a running total of the number of individual customers whose benefit has been reduced because a deduction has been made for child support. However, routine management statistics are maintained on a quarterly basis which show that the number of IS customers with a deduction for child support for the quarter ending 28 February was 16,413. Figures are not available which would break this total down by gender.

Although quarterly statistics have been kept since deductions for child support commenced, these do not represent the total number of customers who will have had deductions made, as many customers will feature in consecutive quarters dependent on the time they are in receipt of IS.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Milk Marketing

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons the timetable for the proposed reform of milk marketing has been changed; what progress is being made concerning the future of the Northern Ireland milk marketing board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The Milk Marketing Board for Northern Ireland has accepted that the vesting date of 1 April 1994, as proposed in its reorganisation scheme, was not realisable. The board may now propose a new vesting date of up to 1 January 1995, but this does not preclude an earlier vesting date provided that their proposals have been approved. Ministers are still examining the proposals in the board's reorganisation scheme. An announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Health and Safety

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of health and safety legislation which is presently applicable in Great Britain but has still to be applied to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tim Smith: Some Great Britain health and safety legislation relates to specific industries—mainly underground coal mining but including some others such as jute processing and nuclear power generation—which have no presence, or only a minimal presence, in Northern Ireland and it has not been considered necessary to replicate this legislation for Northern Ireland.

The following Great Britain health and safety provisions, of a more general nature, have still to be replicated for Northern Ireland:

Title	Statutory instrument number	Footnote number
1. The Mines and Quarries (Tips) Regulations 1971	1971/1377	1
2. The Mines and Quarries (Tipping Plans) Rules 1971	1971/1378	1
3. The Anthrax Prevention Order 1971 (Exemptions) Regulations 1982	1982/1418	2
4. The Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations 1984	1984/1358	3
5. The Dangerous Substances in Harbour Areas Regulations 1987	1987/37	4
6. The Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences (Amendment) Regulations 1989	1989/1457	5
7. The Gas Safety (Installation and Use) (Amendment) Regulations 1990	1990/824	3
8. The Health and Safety (Fees) Regulations 1993	1993/1321
9. The Miscellaneous Factories (Transitional Provisions) Regulations 1993	1993/2482
10. The Railways (Safety Case) Regulations 1994	1994/237
11. The Railways (Safety Critical Work) Regulations 1994	1994/299
12. The Health and Safety (Fees) Regulations 1994	1994/397
13. The Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Road and Rail (Classification, Packaging and Labelling) Regulations 1994	1994/669
14. The Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Rail Regulations 1994	1994/670

Footnotes:

1. It is now considered appropriate to replicate these items in view of the possible commencement of surface gold mining activities in Northern Ireland.

2. These regulations give powers to grant exemptions from the requirements of the Anthrax Prevention Order 1971 and while they have presently no significant relevance for Northern Ireland there is a possibility that they may have to be replicated at some time in the future in response to a requirement of the textile industry.

3. These items were not replicated because of the run-down of the towns gas industry in Northern Ireland. However, it is now appropriate to consider replication as the application of the regulations in Great Britain is to be extended to cover liquefied petroleum gas and also because of plans to bring a natural gas supply to Northern Ireland.

4. This item has been replicated in so far as it applies to dangerous substances other than explosives by the Dangerous Substances in Harbour Areas Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1991. It is hoped that regulations covering explosives will be in place later this year.

5. The application of these regulations to Northern Ireland would relate to mines only and they have not been replicated because there is minimal mining activity in Northern Ireland.

Stormont Estate

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list (a) Government developments in buildings, car parks and other constructions on (i) the Stormont estate and (ii) within a 2 km radius, commenced since 1988 and specifying their purposes, (b) the developments for which planning permission was applied for and then granted, indicating any planning permission refused as well as specifying which developments and extensions went ahead without any planning permission, (c) which (i) temporary buildings have been pulled down and (ii) land returned to its original use as parkland or agricultural land, specifying the locations and (d) the number of civil service jobs decanted out of the Stormont area since 1988; and if it is his intention to return any land concerned from its use for civil service buildings and related developments to parkland.

Mr. Tim Smith: The information is as follows:

(a) (i) Within the Stormont estate there has been no new provision of general office accommodation or associated car parking since 1988.

(ii) Within a 2 km radius of Stormont estate, developments which have commenced since 1988 consist of three laboratories, one animal carcase incinerator, one temporary car park and additional car park spaces at Netherleigh, Massey avenue. Planning permission was obtained for all these developments.

(b) Planning permission was sought and obtained for all developments which required planning permission, which additionally comprised the following:

Dundonald house—disabled access ramp
Dundonald house—new entrance works and disabled access
Castle buildings—replacement of fire escape
Prince of Wales avenue public toilets—replacement building
Massey avenue public toilet and store—replacement buildings
Stormont estate boundary fence phase IV
Veterinary science division—three laboratories
Veterinary science division—one animal carcase incinerator
Veterinary science division—one temporary car park

The following are permitted developments and therefore do not require planning permission:

Courier headquarters—replacement temporary building
Stormont estate—erection of bus shelters
Stormont castle—works to extend car park

(c) (i) No temporary buildings have been pulled down.

(ii) No land has been returned to parkland or agricultural land as a result of the demolition of temporary buildings., However, a site beside Craigantlet buildings previously hardcored and earmarked for a computer contingency site, has been returned to parkland.

(d) Approximately 1,017 jobs have been permanently moved out of the Stormont estate since 1988.

No office accommodation has been declared surplus as a result of the outward movement of staff from the Stormont area and there are no plans at present to return any land to its former use.

Police (Clear-up Rates)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the clear-up rate for recorded offences in each police district in the last year for which figures are available.

Sir John Wheeler: The last year for which figures are available is 1992. The clear-up rates are shown by police division.

Division	Divisional headquarters	Clear-up rates Per cent.
A	Musgrave street, Belfast	29·7
B	Grosvenor road, Belfast	30·6
D	Antrim road, Belfast	34·9
E	Strandtown, Belfast	29·3
G	Newtownards	35·6
H	Armagh	37·4
J	Mahon road, Portadown	42·1
K	Dungannon	39·5
L	Enniskillen	38·7
N	Strand road, Londonderry	42·3

TRANSPORT

Driving Licences

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre and Department of Transport have drawn so far regarding the benefits of introducing photocard licences.

Mr. Key: Credit-card-style driving licences which included a photograph and the driver's signature would help the enforcement authorities to identify drivers with more certainty. Drivers would be more likely to carry the new licences because of their convenient size and better durability. These changes would be of great benefit to the enforcement authorities and would help protect the motoring public against fraudulent use of stolen driving licences.

Transport Research Laboratory

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list research projects undertaken by the Transport Research Laboratory into (a) pedestrian safety, (b) public transport and (c) disabled drivers and pedestrians in the last five years;

(2) what research projects have been undertaken by the Transport Research Laboratory on behalf of foreign Governments in the last five years; and if he will list the value of these projects and the Governments involved.

Mr. Key: As the information requested by the hon. Member relates to operational matters of the Transport Research Laboratory I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. Wootton to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 4 May 1994:

PQ 2144/93/94, PQ 2141/93/94

The Minister for Roads and Traffic has asked me to reply to your two Questions on research projects undertaken in the last five years by the Transport Research Laboratory (TRL).

I enclose two lists of projects. One is a list of projects on (a) pedestrian safety, (b) public transport and (c) disabled drivers and pedestrians. The other is a list of projects carried out for foreign governments over the last five years giving the nature of the research, the total value of each project and the government for which the research was undertaken.

Road Traffic Growth

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of the Secretary of State for the Environment of 25 April, Official Report, column 36, if he will place in the Library details and applications of the econometric model employed by his Department for forecasting road traffic growth.

Mr. Key: The econometric model to which my right hon. Friend referred and on which the estimated carbon saving is based was described in detail in an article published in "Transport Policy 1993", volume. 1, No. 1. I am placing a copy of the article in the Library.

Motorway Use

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has of the total amount of annual use that is made, in journey miles, of the United Kingdom motorway system; and if he will provide separate figures for (a) cars and vans and (b) larger freight vehicles and coaches.

Mr. Key: The provisional estimate of traffic on the motorway system in the United Kingdom in 1993 is 38·6 billion vehicle miles of which cars, taxis and light vans account for 32·7 billion vehicle-miles and goods vehicles 5·3 billion vehicle-miles. Figures for cars and light vans excluding taxis are not available. Provisional figures are not available for coaches.

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what was the cost of road traffic accidents over the last five years on the A64 between Hopgrove roundabout and the Castle Howard dual carriageway and between Malton and Seamer;

(2) what was the cost of road traffic accidents on the A64 over each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Key: As the information requested relates to operational matters of the Highways Agency, I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. John Sykes, dated 11 May:

I have been asked to reply to your questions numbered 14 and 15 on the Order Paper for Tuesday 10 May because the information requested relates to operational matters for which the Highways Agency is responsible.

The cost of road traffic accidents on the A64 trunk road between Leeds and Scarborough in each of the last 5 years was:

Year	£ million
1990	11·45
1991	7·46
1992	7·68
1993	6·72

The cost of road traffic accidents over the last five years on the single carriageway of the A64 trunk road between Hopgrove Roundabout and the Castle Howard dual carriageway was £5·69m and between Malton and Seamer was £12·67 million.

School Transport

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the terms of reference of the working party on investigating problems of safety in school transport; and when he expects to publish the findings of the working party.

Mr. Key: My Department is currently considering the full technical and cost implications of fitting seat belts to all seats in new minibuses and coaches. We hope to publish the conclusions shortly.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if spent nuclear fuel rods from (a) Germany and (b) other European countries will be transported through the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: This is a decision for Eurotunnel. I understand that it will not be allowing spent nuclear fuel rods or any nuclear waste to be transported throught the tunnel.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) for what reasons his Department proposes to construct a split-level interchange on the A27 at Comps Farm; and what account he has taken in making this proposal of his decision not to proceed with the A26 Beddingham to Itford farm diversion scheme;

(2) what steps he is taking to incorporate the suggestions made by Lewes district council into his proposals for the A27 Lewes to Polegate improvement scheme; what assessment he has made of the environmental impact of his present proposals for the stretch of road at the foot of Mount Caburn; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make it his policy in respect of the A27 Lewes to Polegate improvement scheme that he will undertake an assessment of the environmental damage lighting will cause before any decision is taken as to which stretches of the proposed new dual carriageway will be lit; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what percentage of land (a) used during construction of the proposed A27 Lewes to Polegate improvement scheme and (b) used as part of the new road or its immediate curtilage, falls within the Sussex downs area of outstanding natural beauty;

(5) what representations he has received from doctors in Lewes about the health implications of the proposed A27 Lewes to Polegate scheme; and if he will make a statement.

(6) what assessment he has made of the likely change in polluting gases from vehicle exhausts which will result from the construction of the proposed A27 Lewes to Polegate scheme; and if he will make a statement;

(7) what was the average daily flow of vehicles along (a) the A27 Lewes to Beddingham, (b) the A27 Beddingham to Polegate and (c) the A26 Beddingham to Newhaven for (i) 1983 and (ii) 1993; and what are the projected flows for (A) 2003 and (B) 2013;

(8) what steps he intends to take to improve road safety along the present A27 Lewes to Polegate road in advance of the construction of the proposed A27 Lewes-Polegate improvement scheme;

(9) what assessment he made of the potential growth in passenger and freight traffic of the Lewes to Polegate rail line before announcing his plans to construct a new dual carriageway from Lewes to Polegate;

(10) if he will indicate the location, frequency and severity of accidents along the A27 Lewes to Polegate road for each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement;

(11) how many hectares of countryside he estimates will be needed to enable the proposed A27 Lewes to Polegate improvement scheme to be built; how many of these hectares will be returned to countryside following the construction of this scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 9 May 1994]: These questions relate to operational matters of the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Simon Hughes, dated 11 May 1994:

A27 Lewes to Polegate improvement

The Minister for Roads and Traffic, Mr. Key, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about various aspects of the A27 Lewes to Polegate Improvement.

The total estimated land take for the Preferred route is 233 hectares, subject to detailed survey and design. It is proposed that some 60 hectares should be returned to agriculture after regrading. Of the remainder, about 60 hectares are required for the new carriageway construction (including verges and central reserves) and 113 hectares for cutting and embankment side slopes, landscaping and planting.

The accident data for the last 10 years is not readily available but data for accidents over the period between 1990 and 1994 is given below.

Number of accidents

	Slight	Serious	Fatal
1990	21	12	3
1991	21	6	2
1992	33	7	—
1993	24	7	1
1994[1]	9	2	1

[1] To March.

The accidents are spread along the length of the route from Lewes to Polegate with particular concentration in Firle Straight and between Ripe and Alciston. The 7 fatal accidents involved the deaths of 8 people.

The A27 Lewes-Polgate Improvement scheme is necessary to solve existing problems of safety and congestion along this section of the trunk road, and meets the demands of predicted future traffic flows. No detailed assessment of potential growth in passenger and freight traffic of the Lewes-Polegate rail line has been made but it is considered that the effect of any such growth would be small in terms of the overall traffic flow on the A27 and would not affect the need for the proposed improvement.

A number of small improvement schemes have recently been completed on the A27 between Polegate and Lewes as part of the Highways Agency's rolling programme of minor works. During 1994-95 the Agency will improve signing and carriageway markings between Salmeston and Alfriston roundabout as part of a maintenance scheme which will improve skidding resistance to the road surface and we have commissioned extra signing at Charleston Farmhouse where visibility is poor to warn drivers of possible queues ahead. We are also investigating whether safety improvements which might help reduce accidents at Alfriston roundabout and the Wilmington crossroads are feasible and justified.

The recorded flows and the forecast flows of vehicles (Annual Average Daily Traffic) for the sections of road requested are summarised below—

	A27 (a)	A27 (b)	A26 (c)
1993	[1]14,500	[1]11,200	6,150
1993	22,200	15,300	9,600
1998[2]	31,200—34,200	22,200—24,300	12,100—13,300
2003[2]	39,500—48,300	28,100—34,300	15,300—18,700

[1] There is no automatic traffic counter data for 1983 on the A27. Flows are based on 1985 figures adjusted for growth from 1983 to 1985.
[2] Forecast flows represent a range based on the low and high expectations of economic growth. Forecast flows for 2003 are not currently available but flows for 1998 are given.

These sections of road, as currently constructed, are not designed to accommodate the forecast levels of traffic growth.

The pollution from vehicle exhausts will reduce in future years as a result of more stringent exhaust emission controls, irrespective of the scheme proposals. The scheme will however improve the free flow of traffic along the A27 and this is expected to contribute to a further improvement in air quality. Detailed air quality comparisons will be published as part of the Environmental Statement for the scheme.

A letter has just been received from the doctors at the St. Andrew's Surgery in Lewes. The doctors seek further information on and express concern about the possible health implications from vehicle pollution.

Of the areas of land so far identified for temporary construction works which will be returned to agriculture and for permanent use, about 50% would be within the Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty in both cases.

The case for lighting parts of the route between the junctions at Lewes, Beddingham and Polegate has yet to be assessed. The environmental effects of any proposed lighting will be given in the Environmental Statement for the scheme.

Lewes District Council have highlighted particular areas of concern where they believe the Preferred Route has an adverse effect on the landscape, on conservation interests or on people. Possible means of reducing these effects will be considered and detailed environmental assessments carried out before the draft Orders are published.

The proposed split-level junction at Comps farm is to provide access to and from the new route for traffic wishing to access the port of Newhaven. The siting of the junction makes use of the natural landform north of Comps Farm to contain as far as possible the visual intrusion of the slip roads and roundabouts, and is considered to be the best location for the junction either with or without improvement of the A26.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts Committees

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) if he will list all the magistrates courts committees which have appointed a head of service and those magistrates courts committees whose head of service are (a) purely a chief executive to the committee and (b) both chief executive to the committee and a justices' clerk to a sole petty sessions area;

(2) if he will list those magistrates courts committees that have named their head of service (a) chief justices' clerk, (b) justices' chief executive, (c) chief executive and (d) another name; and if he will list those other names and the number of magistrates courts committees adopting each one.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Under the present statutory arrangements, every magistrates courts committee has a clerk who serves in an administrative capacity and is not a head of service. Sometimes the post is full time, sometimes part time with the postholder serving also as a justices' clerk for one or more petty sessional divisions or, in a few cases, as a local authority official. The Lord Chancellor's approval is not currently required for the appointment of clerks to committees and committees are free to give their own titles to the posts without consulting the Department.

All official correspondence from the Department is addressed to clerks to the magistrates courts committees. However, a number of committees have combined the role of clerk to the committee with that of a chief executive by appointing that individual as a joint justices clerk for all the petty sessional divisions in the committee's area.

Immigration Tribunals (Adjudicators' Expenses)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement about the purpose of the new expenses forms for part-time adjudicators for the immigration tribunals.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The expense forms relate to the payment of fees for judicial employment. The use of forms to claim and monitor expenses is standard departmental practice and is not new.

The latest versions of these forms were introduced as part of a revised system for the payment of fees. This commenced on 5 April 1994 following a general review of accounting procedures. The earlier system had been set up when the workload of the Immigration Appellate Authorities—IAA—was smaller than now, and when part-time adjudicators were deployed less frequently. The revised system was set up to facilitate monitoring of expenses by the IAA's administration following a reversal of these trends.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many representations he has had concerning the new expenses forms for part-time adjudicators for the immigration tribunals.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have not received any representations concerning the new forms for payment of fees to part-time adjudicators.

Inner London Youth Court Panel

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the ethnic breakdown of the (a) male and (b) female members of the inner London youth court panel.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information on the particular ethnic origin of magistrates serving on the inner London youth court panel is not currently available. In general terms there are 236 members of the inner London youth court panel of whom 88 are males and 148 females. Of these, 10 males and nine females are from the ethnic minority community.

Race Awareness Seminars

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what future plans he has for the judicial race awareness seminars.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers I gave to her on 26 January 1994 at column 239 and to the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 30 March 1994 at column 748. This programme of seminars is arranged by the Judicial Studies Board. I understand that the board plans to hold 35 seminars for the judiciary over the next two years at locations throughout England and Wales.

Crown Court

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many sitting days in the Crown court were lost as a result of listed trials being disposed of without a jury being sworn in in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Bosnia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he regards the external borders of Bosnia-Herzegovina as unchangeable in any Bosnian settlement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We remain of the view that the only way to a lasting peace is through a settlement acceptable to the parties. The terms of that settlement, including territorial and constitutional arrangements, must be for the parties themselves to decide. Within a settlement, the external borders of Bosnia-Herzegovina would remain unchanged unless the parties agreed otherwise.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the extent of Serb forces in the Brcko area.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Posavina corridor, and Brcko which lies within it, is an area held by Bosnian Serb forces. The United Nations has recently deployed military observers to the area to monitor the situation. The United Nations has not made data available on the detailed deployment of Bosnian Serb forces in the area.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library the text of remarks made by the Minister of State, the right hon. and learned Member for Grantham, (Mr. Hogg), in Sarajevo about the retention of territory by the Serbs in any Bosnian settlement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My discussions with members of the Bosnian Government on Sarajevo on 3 May were confidential. No official statement was subsequently issued by either side. In comments to the press, I reiterated our support for the European Union action plan.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was his initial estimate of how many civilians were wounded in the recent fighting in Gorazde and on what information it is based; how many wounded have been evacuated from Gorazde since the latest ceasefire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Based on information provided by the local Bosnian authorities the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees report that the number of people wounded on the Bosnian Muslim side in the recent fighting in Gorazde was 715 dead and 1,970 wounded. No distinction is made between civilian and military casualties. A total of 290 casualties have been medically evacuated.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is UN and Nato policy about the defence of Brcko in Bosnia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Security Council agreed a presidential statement on 4 May calling on all parties to agree to a resumption of negotiations and demanding that they refrain from any offensive military action, or any action likely to lead to renewed fighting. The statement noted with concern indications of increased tension in the Posavina corridor area where Brcko is situated, welcomed the steps taken by UNPROFOR to deploy military observers there, and warned the parties of the serious consequences of any offensive military action in the area. The Security Council is keeping the situation under review.

NATO stands ready to support the United Nations and UNPROFOR in the performance of its mandate.

Conventional Arms Register

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Kingdom deposited its 1993 submission to the United Nations register of conventional arms; and if he will place a copy of the submission in the Library.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 9 May 1994, Official Report, column 5.

Macedonia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the mandate of United Nations personnel in Macedonia in the event of offensive activity against Macedonia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The mandate for UNPROFOR in the former Yugoslavia republic of Macedonia under United Nations Security Council resolution 795 is to monitor and report any developments in the border areas which could undermine confidence and stability in FYROM and threaten its territory.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what amendments he will be seeking to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty when it comes up for renegotiation next year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are seeking the unconditional and indefinite extension of the non-proliferation treaty, in unamended form, at the 1995 extension and review conference.

Lockerbie

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the decision of the Arab League Council meeting of Foreign Ministers in Cairo in so far as it related to the Lockerbie case; and what response he is making.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the written reply I gave to him on 12 April, Official Report, column 21.

The Arab League, and our partners in the United Nations Security Council, are aware of our position on the proposal in the Arab League Council resolution for a Scottish trial of the two accused of the Lockerbie bombing to be held at the seat of the International Court of Justice in The Hague.

Our view remains that the Libyan Government should comply with the mandatory Security Council resolutions and, in particular, hand over the two accused for a trial in Scotland or the United States without further delay.

Iraq

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the question of the current sanctions against Iraq was last discussed by the Council of Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Council of Ministers most recently discussed sanctions against Iraq at the EU-Gulf Co-operation Council on 8 May.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Her Majesty's Government's policy will be on the renewal of sanctions against Iraq at the Security Council of the United Nations on 17 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Security Council meeting on 17 May will be to review whether Iraq has met the conditions for the removal of United Nations sanctions. The meeting will not decide whether or not to renew sanctions. The sanctions regime against Iraq will continue to remain in place, without need for renewal, unless and until the Security Council passes a resolution specifically deciding on their lifting.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Red Cross or the Red Crescent concerning medical supplies to Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies issued an appeal for funds for assistance to Iraq on 25 March, which included provision for medical supplies. The British Red Cross is clarifying one or two issues concerning the appeal, following which a decision on a possible contribution from us will be taken.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effects United Nations sanctions have had on the economic situation in Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We keep all aspects of the situation in Iraq under review. It is open to the Government of Iraq to ensure the removal of economic sanctions by complying fully with all relevant United Nations Security Council resolutions.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from United Nations Educational Scientific and Cultural Organisation concerning the effects the UN sanctions on Iraq have on the education and culture of Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have received no representations from UNESCO concerning the effects of UN sanctions on Iraq.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to him or to the United Nations by the United Nations Children's Fund concerning the effects sanctions have had on the children and young people of Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am not aware of any UNICEF representations to us or the United Nations about the effect of sanctions on the children of Iraq.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made on the effects the UN sanctions have had on the medical provision and supplies to the civilian population of Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The provision of medical supplies is specifically exempted from United Nations sanctions on Iraq. The Security Council has also provided means under its resolutions 706 and 712 for the Government of Iraq to export a fixed quantity of oil in order to pay for such supplies; although the Iraqis have refused to make use of this facility. With the help of information from UN agencies and British non-governmental organisations we keep all aspects of the humanitarian situation in Iraq under review.

MV Playa

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has in respect of the Yugoslav ship Playa detained in the port of Liverpool; what the policy is towards the crew of the ship; if communication with the outside world is permitted; when he expects the ship to be released; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The MV Playa is a Montenegran-owned ship. Under paragraph 24 of Security Council resolution 820, we are obliged to impound all vessels, freight vehicles, rolling stock and aircraft of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in the United Kingdom. The crew can be supplied with water, gas, solid fuel, medical products, goods for personal hygiene and goods for cleansing under an open licence which has been granted by the DTI. The supply of other goods may be authorised on request.

There are no restrictions on the crew's ability to communicate and they are free to leave the United Kingdom at any time.

The ship cannot be moved until it is either sold to non-Federal Republic of Yugoslavia nationals or until sanctions are lifted.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many current and former officials and Ministers in his Department have been asked to give written or oral evidence to the Scott inquiry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Thirty-one FCO officials—27 serving and four former—and eight FCO Ministers—two serving and six former—have been asked to supply written evidence to Lord Justice Scott's inquiry. Of these, 19 officials—16 serving and three former—and seven Ministers—one serving and six former—subsequently have been asked to attend to give oral evidence. All officials and Ministers asked to supply written evidence, and to give oral evidence, have done so.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what amendments have been made to the list of posts designated to accept entry clearance applications overseas.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The latest list has been placed in the Libraries of the House today.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 13 May 1994

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Byers: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 6 May, Official Report, columns 666-67, which client departments have received advice from the Treasury Solicitor's Department; and what has been the cost to each department of such advice.

The Attorney-General: The following charges have been invoiced as at 13 May 1994 to client departments by the Treasury Solicitor's Department for legal services provided in connection with the Scott inquiry:

Foreign and Commonwealth Office	49,702·83
Department of Trade and Industry	85,193·39

In addition, the Treasury Solicitor's Department has submitted invoices to the Ministry of Defence which I understand are under consideration by it.

The Treasury Solicitor in the normal course of his duties has given legal advice to the Cabinet Secretary for which no charge falls to be made.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Attorney-General how many employees have worked on a full or part-time basis with the Scott inquiry liaison unit set up within his Department; when the unit was established; and when its work will be completed.

The Attorney-General: There are no Scott inquiry liaison units in my Departments. Liaison is undertaken by staff in my Departments as part of their normal duties.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the recent Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development Operation Lifeline Sudan sub-committee talks in Nairobi to increase access for aid in Sudan; and what progress was made in gaining access by international aid agencies to the Nuba mountains.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The IGADD-OLS sub-committee on relief access met from 6 to 9 May in Nairobi, without agreement. Informal discussions are continuing.

No progress has been made on the Nuba mountains since my answer on 10 May at column 79.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the present military situation in Sudan; and how this is affecting the delivery of aid by international relief organisations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The conflict in the south is continuing but may be curtailed by the recent onset of the rainy season. The security situation in parts of Equatoria and Upper Nile has caused the temporary withdrawal of some relief staff. Relief deliveries have also been affected. The Government of Sudan refused clearance to six air-supplied destinations in April and four in May.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current estimate of the number of refugees from Rwanda now in neighbouring countries; and what is being done by the European Union and Her Majesty's Government to increase the levels of support.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: According to reports of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees there are about 250,000 Rwandan refugees in Tanzania, 47,000 in Burundi, 8,000 in Uganda and 10,000 in Zaire. I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 10 May at column 81 about support to these refugees by Her Majesty's Government and the European Union.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much assistance his Department has pledged for Rwanda since the beginning of April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since 6 April 1994, Britain has committed £3·35 million bilaterally of humanitarian assistance for Rwandans fleeing the violence.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Water and Sewerage Industry

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 26 April, Official Report, column 104, regarding the making and terminating of appointments by regulatory authorities, if Ofwat is required to operate under the terms of the civil service management code in relation to staff appointments and dismissals.

Mr. Eggar: This is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Ofwat

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 26 April, Official Report, column 104, who is responsible for the appointment of the Director General of Ofwat.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales are jointly responsible for the appointment of the Director General of Ofwat.

British Coal

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what arrangements have been made for meeting the residual obligations of British Coal; what level of financial resources has been set aside to meet these obligations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Residual obligations remaining temporarily with British Coal after privatisation would be funded principally by residual payments grant under the provisions of clause 18 of the Coal Industry Bill currently before Parliament. Estimates will be put before Parliament in due course.

Gas Industry

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how he proposes to ensure that the consultation process on the future of the gas industry will include adequate consideration of energy efficiency.

Mr. Eggar: The consultation document, "Competition and Choice in the Gas Market", contains a chapter on the efficient use of gas. Views have been invited over the coming weeks.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the objectives of the Director General of Ofgas; and what importance is assigned to the promotion of energy efficiency.

Mr. Eggar: The duties of the Director General of Gas Supply are set out in section 4 of the Gas Act 1986. They include, as one of her several secondary duties, a requirement to exercise her functions in the manner that she considers is best calculated to promote the efficient use of gas supplied through pipes.

TREASURY

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many parliamentary questions, in the period November 1992 to March 1993 were answered with the response that the information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost; how many were referred on to an agency chief executive; and, in each case, what percentage of the total number of questions asked this constituted.

Mr. Nelson: Between November 1992 and March 1993, 11 out of 1,265 written questions to Treasury Ministers—0·9 per cent.—were not answered substantively because the information requested was not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. During the same period two questions—0·2 per cent.—were referred to agency chief executives for reply.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the present relationship between the International Monetary Fund and Sudan; and what are the IMF's major grounds for concern about Sudan's financial position and conduct.

Mr. Nelson: As of 5 May, Sudan had arrears to the IMF amounting to SDR 1·177 billion or $1·664 billion. Sudan was declared ineligible to use the general resources of the fund on 3 February 1986, a declaration of non-cooperation was issued on 14 September 1990, its right to use special drawing rights other than for settling its arrears to the fund was suspended on 2 November 1990 and its voting rights were suspended as from 9 August 1993. The fund has initiated proceedings that could lead to compulsory withdrawal of Sudan from the fund.

The fund took these measures as a result of Sudan's persistent failure to co-operate with the fund in addressing the problem of the arrears evidenced by failure to formulate appropriate economic adjustment measures and failure to agree a schedule of payment to the fund with a view to stabilising the arrears.

Tax Deposit Certificates

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about holders of certificates of tax deposits disadvantaged by the introduction of independent taxation.

Mr. Nelson: The Government have decided to provide compensation for certain holders of certificates of tax deposit—CTDs—disadvantaged by the introduction of independent taxation of husbands and wives in April 1990.

The Government now propose that anyone who bought a CTD before 6 April 1990 and subsequently cashed it in to pay a spouse's tax liability may apply for a payment equivalent to the difference between the higher and lower interest rates. Effective immediately, anyone still holding a CTD bought before 6 April 1990 will be able to use it to pay his/her own or his/her spouse's liability and receive the higher rate of interest. Legislation to introduce these compensation payments will be included in the next Finance Bill.

CTDs are typically purchased by people or companies in dispute with the Inland Revenue about their tax liabilities. CTD holders receive a higher rate of interest if they use the CTD to pay off their own tax liabilities, and a lower rate if they cash the CTD in instead.

Before 6 April 1990, when independent taxation was introduced, a married couple was treated as single tax unit. So a CTD in one partner's name could be used to pay the tax liability of the couple. Once independent taxation was introduced, tax liabilities were separated. So a CTD in, say, the husband's name could not be used to pay the liability of his wife. Instead, he would have to cash in the CTD, receiving the lower rate of interest.

The test of whether the CTD was cashed in to pay a spouse's liability will be whether any such payment was made within a month either side of the CTD being cashed in.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his latest estimates of the costs to the Exchequer of local government reform in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 12 May 1994]: The costs of local government reform in the United Kingdom as a whole will depend on the final structures adopted in England. Any costs should be more than offset by the on going savings that the new arrangements are expected to generate. The proportion of those costs and savings which will fall to the Exchequer will depend on the outcome of future public expenditure surveys.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Television and Radio Licences

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consultations he has had with the European Community concerning the directive proposing to abolish licence fees for television and radio.

Mr. Brooke: None.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Ethnic Minorities

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future role of section 11 grant in the Government's programme to combat racial inequality.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We continue to attach much importance to tackling the root causes of racial disadvantage—lack of English being a prime example—so that members of ethnic minorities can play a full part in the social and economic life of the country.

We envisage that the particular needs of ethnic minorities in the future will be met either through section 11 funding or through wider regeneration programmes under the single regeneration budget.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what target figures he has for the (a) national and (b) regional areas to spend on section 11 related projects for 1995-96;

(2) what is the planned level of expenditure in 1994-95 on section 11 grant to local authorities, (a) nationally and (b) regionally.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Current Home Office provision for the payment of section 11 grant to local authorities in 1994-95 is £46·6 million and the corresponding figure in 1995-96 is £41 million. It is not possible to give precise Home Office grant expenditure figures for 1994-95 as a whole, which will be affected by actual expenditure incurred by grant recipients. The following figures, broken down by regions, reflect budget allocations notified to local authorities in England in relation to their expenditure in 1994-95:

London	13,947,117
South-East	5,231,780
Eastern	5,190,023
South-West	1,042,756
West Midlands	1,981,374
East Midlands	6,535,306
North-West	5,981,235
Merseyside	—
Yorkshire and Humberside	1,475,385

In addition, authorities in Wales have been notified of allocations amounting to £645,528.

Section 11 grant is paid by the Home Office in relation to approved projects reflecting local needs; there can be no pre-determined expenditure targets for particular areas.

Mentally Disordered Offenders

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment is made of the requirements of mentally disordered offenders in determining appropriate staffing levels for individual prisons;

(2) what steps he takes to ensure that mentally disordered offenders awaiting transfer from prison to NHS establishments receive appropriate care and treatment prior to transfer;

(3) what is his current estimate of the number of mentally disordered offenders within HM prison, Wakefield who are awaiting transfer to national health service facilities; and what is the maximum waiting period.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 13 May 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Questions about mentally disordered offenders.

The health care staffing of an establishment is a matter on which the governor is advised by the head of health care and by senior health professionals at Prison Service Headquarters. It is open to the governor to recruit more health care staff within the constraints of his/her budget or to seek extra funds for this purpose. The second floor of the Wakefield health care centre, which HM Inspectors found was not in use because of staffing problems, has been in continuous use for the past three months.

As of 10 May 1994 there were 30 prisoners in Wakefield Prison who, in the opinion of the Senior Medical Officer, require in patient treatment in a psychiatric hospital. One prisoner has been waiting over six months for transfer to a regional secure unit.

The Prison Service strives to provide a service for mentally disordered prisoners equivalent to that which they would receive in the community. To this end consultant psychiatrists provided 16,737 consultations in 1992/93. Since June 1993 the Newcastle Mental Health Trust has been contracted to provide a multi-disciplinary service to Durham, Frankland and Low Newton prisons. We aim to extend contracting-in to other parts of the prison system. There is also a strategy to increase the number of professionally qualified health care staff, through the recruitment of nursing grades and improved training for health care officers. Between March 1992 and March 1994 the number of nursing grades working in prisons rose from 257 to 539 and the percentage of all health care staff with professional qualifications increased from 35 per cent. to 51 per cent.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to respond to the references in the report of 10 May by Judge Stephen Tumin into the number of mentally disordered offenders within HM prison, Wakefield who would be more appropriately placed in national health service establishments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is Government policy that offenders who have mental disorders requiring in-patient care should receive it from the national health service. Every effort is made to ensure the swift transfer of such prisoners to appropriate outside hospitals. In England and Wales the number of Mental Health Act transfers to hospital has more than doubled from 325 in 1990 to 755 in 1993. We hope that this figure will continue to rise in future years, although any further increase in transfers will depend on sufficient capacity in outside hospitals.

Campsfield Detention Centre

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the capital and revenue costs of security measures at Campsfield detention centre.

Mr. Charles Wardle: These costs are commercially confidential and it would not be proper to disclose them.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Private Members' Bills

Ms Lynne: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make the support and advice of Parliamentary Counsel available to all hon. Members.

Mr. Newton: The role of the Office of Parliamentary Counsel is to draft legislation at the request of Ministers. I have no plans to change this.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many amendments for consideration at the report Stage of the Tobacco Advertising Bill have been drafted by the Office of Parliamentary Counsel.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many amendments for consideration at the report Stage of the Tobacco Advertising Bill have been drafted by the Office of Parliamentary Counsel; and on whose instructions such amendments were drafted.

Mr. Newton: None of the amendments for consideration at the Report stage of the Bill has been drafted by the Office of Parliamentary Counsel.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many private members have had the support of Parliamentary Counsel in drafting amendments to other private Members' Bills since April 1992.

Mr. Newton: Parliamentary Counsel draft amendments on the instructions of Departments acting on the authority of Ministers. How many of these were subsequently tabled by private Members is not recorded.

Business of the House

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will give the business of the House for the week commencing 16 May.

Mr. Newton: The business for next week will be:

MONDAY 16 MAY—There will be a debate on the European Union on a Motion for the Adjournment of the House.

TUESDAY 17 MAY—Progress on remaining stages of the Local Government Etc. (Scotland) Bill.

WEDNESDAY 18 MAY—Progress on remaining stages of the Local Government Etc. (Scotland) Bill.

THURSDAY 19 MAY—Conclusion of remaining stages of the Local Government Etc. (Scotland) Bill.

FRIDAY 20 MAY—Private Members' Bills.

MONDAY 23 MAY—Motion on the Coal Industry (Restructuring Grants) Order.

Motion on the Value Added Tax (Education) Order.

Motion on the Railways Pension Scheme Order.

Motion on the Railway Pensions (Protection and Designation of Schemes) Order.

European Standing Committee will meet at 10·30 am on Wednesday 18 May to consider European Community Documents as follows:

Standing Committee A

Document No. 6428/94 relating to the application of the milk quota scheme to Italy.

Standing Committee B

Document No. 4715/94 and the unnumbered explanatory memorandum submitted by the Department of Education on 9 May relating to the Socrates programme on education and training.

EDUCATION

Study Regulation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will reconsider his decision not to extend the previous study regulation to one year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Mandatory awards for students underwrite one opportunity for personally eligible students to undertake a course of higher education. Under the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations, attendance of 20 weeks or less on one course with the benefit of [illegible] award is disregarded in deciding if a student is eligible for an award for a second course. My right hon. Friend has no plans to change these long-standing arrangements, which already allow attendance for more than half an academic year to be disregarded.

Doncaster College

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the level of funding by the Further and Higher Education Council to Doncaster college in 1993-94; and what is the planned level in 1994-95.

Mr. Boswell: The Further Education Funding Council's allocations to Doncaster college for the 16-month period April 1993 to July 1994, the first financial year in the new FE sector, as given in its document "Funding Allocations 1993-94" are as follows:

Recurrent funding	14,798,129
Capital equipment	351,000
Minor works	3,337,365

In addition, the college received £11,00 from the FEFC for the period April 1993 to March 1994 in respect of continuing PICKUP—professional industrial and commerial updating—activity.

The FEFC is currently consulting colleges on their provisional allocations for the period August 1994 to July 1995. Final allocations will be announced in mid-June.

The Higher Education Funding Council for England's funding for Doncaster college in the 1993-94 academic year is some £1·15 million. This includes £29,000 for a special initiative to provide new higher education courses in localities with limited current provision. The college will receive some £1·88 million in 1994-95 and may also submit proposals for further special initiative funding which, if successful, will provide additional funds.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what loans or other special arrangements have been made for any grant-maintained school in deficit or with an expected deficit for the last financial year or the current financial year.

Mr. Robin Squire: In the last financial year loans were made to three grant-maintained schools in accordance with the Education (Grant-maintained Schools) (Loans) Regulations 1993. On the basis of its monitoring, the Department is not aware of any grant-maintained school that had a cash deficit in 1993-94 or the previous financial year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

War Pensions

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of ex-service personnel who fought in either the Falklands or Gulf wars and are now in receipt of a war pension.

Mr. Hague: Records indicate that, of those ex-service personnel who fought in the Falklands conflict and who made claims for a war pension up to June 1991, 104 are now receiving a war disablement pension. No information is held about any who may have claimed since June 1991.

Sixty-five war disablement pensions are in payment to ex-service personnel who fought in the Gulf war.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 32 how many and what proportion of those claimants of invalidity benefit who receive an occupational pension had been receiving such pension payments for (a) up to six months, (b) up to one year, (c) up to two years and (d) more than two years; and if such pensions had been in payment to the claimant during (i) the first six months of incapacity, (ii) between six and 12 months of the start of the incapacity and (iii) only after the first year of incapacity.

Mr. Scott: This information is not available.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 210, of the claimants of invalidity benefit also receiving an income from investment, what were the sources of this investment income; and of those with net earnings, how many and what proportion had payments from former employers, classified by type of employer payment.

Mr. Scott: The table shows the main sources of investment income with recipients as a proportion of all invalidity benefit recipients with investment income.

Information is not available on the number and proportion of invalidity benefit recipients with net earnings who receive payments from former employers.

Type of investment income	Proportion per cent.
Interest from bank accounts (net and gross)	30
Interest from building society accounts (net and gross)	75
Income from stocks and shares and British savings bonds interest	30
Other investment income	15

Notes:

1. Total may sum to more than 100 per cent. as individuals can have more than one source of investment income.
2. Figures are based on information from the 1990 and 1991 Family Expenditure Sources Investment income in the survey is subject to large margins of uncertainty.
3. Figures are rounded to the nearest 5 per cent.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people claiming incapacity benefit after April 1995 he estimates will also receive payments from occupational or private schemes for long-term incapacity.

Mr. Scott: We have no estimates of the number of people who will be claiming incapacity benefit after April 1995 who will also receive payments from an occupational or a private scheme.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many invalid care allowance claimants have had payments of arrears of this benefit restricted to 12 months where an award of attendance allowance or disability living allowance to the person they are caring for has taken more than 12 months to determine;

(2) if he will trawl all existing invalid care allowance claims and awards to identify cases where payment of arrears of invalid care allowance has been restricted to a period of 12 months where the time taken to determine the related attendance allowance or disability living allowance claim has taken more than 12 months; and if he will make payment of invalid care allowance or a compensation payment for the further back period;

(3) if he will amend social security regulations to allow back payment of invalid care allowance for more than 12 months where a determination and award on a related claim for attendance allowance or disability living allowance has taken more than 12 months.

Mr. Scott: To date, 241 claimants have had their invalid care allowance arrears limited to the statutory 12 months due to delays by this Department in processing the related attendance allowance or disability living allowance claims. Such ICA claims were identified at the outset and all claimants have been, or will be, paid the equivalent of their ICA arrears in full by way of ex-gratia payments. Any similar claims will be dealt with in the same way.

There are no plans to amend the relevant legislation.

Private Members' Bills

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what occasions Ministers from his Department have requested Parliamentary Counsel to assist in preparing amendments to private Members' Bills on behalf of other private members.

Mr. Lilley: None. In the case of the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill, my right hon. Friend the Minister of State authorised officials to instruct Parliamentary Counsel to prepare amendments which were subsequently passed to private Members.

ENVIRONMENT

European Commissioner

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will next meet the European Commissioner for the Environment; and what items he will discuss.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will next meet the Commissioner at the informal Environment Council on 13 to 15 May. The Council will discuss tourism and the environment.

Ofwat

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how consumer interests are represented on Ofwat's customer service committees.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 11 May 1994]: Section 29 of the Water Industry Act 1991 places a duty on each customer service committee to keep under review, to consult and to make representations to companies allocated to the committee about all matters appearing to the committee to affect the interests of customers or potential customers of those companies; and to investigate any complaint made by a customer or potential customer relating to the carrying out of any of the functions of a water or sewerage undertaker.

The CSCs report to the Director General of Water Services and advise him on issues which affect customers, to inform his decision making.

Housing Investment

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what (a) further Government grants and (b) supplementary credit approvals were allocated specifically for local authority housing investment in addition to the housing investment programme allocation in each local authority in each year since 1978-79.

Sir George Young [holding answer 15 April 1994]: Before the introduction of the present local authority capital finance system in April 1990, the allocation in-year of additional capital resources for housing investment was reflected in increases to housing investment programme allocations. Powers to issue supplementary credit approvals are contained in the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, and SCAs have therefore been issued only since 1990-91.

Resources have been set aside since 1990-91 outside the envelope of the annual housing investment programme allocations for the following programmes of SCAs and capital grants for housing investment by local authorities:

SCAs
Estate action (1990-91 to 1993-94)
Homelessness (1990-91 and 1991-92)
Ex-new town defects (1991-92 to 1994-95)
Energy efficiency (1991-92 to 1993-94)
Rural housing (1991-92 and 1992-93)
Flats over shops (1992-93 to 1994-95)
Cash incentive schemes (1992-93 and 1994-95)
Housing partnership fund (1993-94 and 1994-95)
Admissible credit approvals (1993-94)
Renovation grants (1990-91 to 1992-93)
Area improvement (1990-91)

Capital grants
Ex-new town defects (1990-91 to 1994-95)
Estate action (1990-91 to 1993-94)

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much (a) further Government grants and (b) supplementary credit approvals were allocated specifically for local authority housing investment in addition to the housing investment programme allocation in each local authority for the years 1978-79, 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Sir George Young [holding answer 15 April 1994]: Before the introduction of the present local authority capital finance system in April 1990, the allocation in-year of additional capital resources for housing investment was reflected in increases to housing investment programme allocations.

Powers to issue supplementary credit approvals are contained in the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, and SCAs have therefore been issued only since 1990-91. SCAs may be issued up to six months after the end of the financial year during which the relevant expenditure is defrayed, and the bulk of housing SCAs for 1993-94 will be issued in the coming months. No housing SCAs have yet been issued for 1994-95.

Details of payments to local authorities in 1993-94 of capital grant which is outside the envelope of the annual housing investment programme allocations have been placed in the Library. No such grant has yet been paid in 1994-95.

Drinking Water

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those mineral waters produced in the United Kingdom that have been, or are to be, prohibited for public consumption under the EC drinking water directive 80/778; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I have been asked to reply.

The provisions of EC directive 80/778 relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption do not apply to natural mineral waters approved under EC directive 80/777 on the approximation of the laws of the member states relating to the exploitation and marketing of natural mineral waters.

EMPLOYMENT

Personnel Data Processing

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total expenditure on the aborted personnel data processing system.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The total expenditure, excluding staff and training costs, on the Department's personnel data processing system was £2·43 million.

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much was paid to McDonnell Douglas in respect of (a) project supplies, (b) software development, (c) computer hardware and (d) other items connected with the personnel data processing system.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The amount paid to McDonnell Douglas, in respect of the Department's personnel data processing system, were:

(a) Project supplies	£2,930
(b) Software development	£782,555
(c) Computer hardware	£625,202
(d) Other items	£351,714

Mobile Telephones Pagers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) portable telephones, (b) pagers and electronic bleepers and (c) car telephones are currently used by his Department; what are the annual costs of operating this equipment; and to which personnel it is made available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Detective Agencies

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much his Department has spent on contracts with private detective agencies since 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Fees for private detective agencies instructed by the Employment Service since 1991 amount to £175 plus VAT.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further steps he is taking to request information from training and enterprise councils in relation to the numbers of secondees from his Department continuing to work for the same training and enterprise councils after having applied successfully under the voluntary early retirement scheme for early retirement (a) in England and (b) in Wales.

Miss Widdecombe: The Permanent Secretary has written to the chairman of every training and enterprise council in England and Wales to ensure that the Department's policy on this matter is fully understood and to seek their support and co-operation in implementing that policy.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of those unemployed for 12 months and more in May 1979; and what are the current figures.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 12 May 1994]: The unadjusted number of United Kingdom claimants unemployed for over a year stood at 1,106,771 in January 1983, the earliest date for which equivalent figures are available. The figure for January 1994 was 1,087,877.

WALES

Library Services

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what resources will be available to the new local authorities in Wales to carry out their statutory duty under the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964 to provide a comprehensive and efficient library service;

(2) what plans will be made to facilitate joint arrangements between the new local authorities to enable them to carry out their statutory responsibilities in relation to public libraries.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Ogmore (Mr. Powell) on 21 March at column 73.

Wind Energy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) of 4 May, Official Report, column 537, if he will name the individuals or bodies who made representations to him on the annexe on wind energy in planning policy guidance note 22.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Wales Wind Energy Forum and the Campaign for the Protection of Rural Wales.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the effect of the impending local government reforms on the local government superannuation scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office has recently consulted all Welsh local authorities, the two local authority associations and other interested organisations on proposals for the administration of superannuation funds under section 7 of the Superannuation Act 1972. The closing date for comments is 30 June.

Public Bodies

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many non-departmental public bodies or similar agencies to which holders of his office make appointments existed in 1979 and in 1993; and if he will list in cash and real terms the total administrative costs, the salaries of each appointed worker and the amount spent in implementing their statutory duties.

Mr. Redwood: The information available is as follows:

Number of public bodies in Wales

	Executive	Advisory	Tribunals	NHS	Total
1978-79	16	12	3	9	40
1 April 1993	23	28	4	33	88

Information on the salaries of each appointed worker and the amount spent in implementing their statutory duties is not available.

The information given is taken from the Report on Non-Departmental Public Bodies (January 1980 Cmnd. 7797) and Public Bodies 1993 (HMSO) which are available in the Library of the House.

The figures include public bodies to which the Secretary of State for Wales does not make appointments; it is not possible to disaggregate the data to include only those bodies to which he makes appointments.

Health Cash Allocations

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he informed the district health authorities in Wales of their cash allocation for 1994-95.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend announced the cash allocations to health authorities in Wales for 1994-95 on 16 March.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received from health authorities and trusts in Wales concerning the cash increase for 1994-95.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A number of trusts have made representations to the Welsh Office regarding the 1994-95 allocations to health authorities but none has related to the level of cash increase provided.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when his Department informed NHS trusts in Wales that they would be required to absorb the pay award to nurses, doctors and midwives in 1994-95.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Following the Government's acceptance of the recommendations of the review bodies on the 1994-95 pay increases to doctors, dentists, nurses and midwives and the profession supplementary to medicine, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health, in a press release on 3 February, made it clear that we looked to the NHS to fund this award through improved efficiency and productivity, allowing the extra money for the NHS announced in the Budget to go directly to patient services. This press release was circulated to NHS trusts in Wales and discussed with their chief executives at a meeting on 15 February.

NHS Job Losses

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on job losses within the national health service in Wales in 1994-95.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The possibility of job losses has been raised in correspondence received by my right hon. Friend from the chairman of the NHS trust chairmen's group and from some individual trusts. No other representations have been received.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Radiation Monitoring Stations

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many radiation monitoring stations there are in Northern Ireland; what plans he has to establish further stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: The gamma dose rate in air is measured at 49 fixed coastal locations on a quarterly basis. This is in addition to the monitoring of locally caught seafood and sediments from the intertidal areas. The results of this monitoring show that radioactivity levels measured are of no radiological significance to the health of the Northern Ireland population and these results have been confirmed by monitoring undertaken by the Northern Ireland radiation monitoring committee, representing district councils in the Province. In recent years, joint surveys undertaken by my Department and colleagues in the Republic of Ireland, into radioactivity levels in Foyle and Carlingford loughs, also confirm that levels are very low. My Department's environmental monitoring programme is under continual review and we are committed to providing public reassurance and information in this way.

In addition to these local measures, under RIMNET —the radiation incident monitoring network, designed to give early warning in the event of an overseas nuclear emergency—five continuous stations are operational in the Province.

Detective Agencies

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much his Department has spent on contracts with private detective agencies since 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: Since 1991 Northern Ireland Civil Service Departments and the Northern Ireland Office have spent £25,017 on inquiries undertaken by private detective agencies as follows:

Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland	[1]9,401
Department of Economic Development	[2]15,616

[1] Investigations into the circumstances relating to persons claiming compensation against the Department as a result of alleged personal injuries through tripping incidents.
[2] Investigations pertinent to economic development.

Prisoners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by Her Majesty's prison and remand home/centre for the latest date he has figures available, the number of inmates whose place of residence is South Yorkshire; and what were the figures (a) 12 months and (b) 24 months ago.

Sir John Wheeler: There were no prisoners with a last known address in South Yorkshire being held in Her Majesty's prisons in Northern Ireland on 1 May 1994, 1993 or 1992.

Police Sick Leave

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by sex, and by year for the last 10 years, the average number of police officer days lost for reasons of sickness in each police division.

Sir John Wheeler: The available information is as follows:

Table 1—Average days lost per member

Year	Male	Female	Force	Day type
1984	n/a	n/a	14·37	Total
1985	n/a	n/a	14·94	Total

PRIME MINISTER

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister how many employees have worked on a full-time or part-time basis with the Scott inquiry liaison unit set up within the Cabinet Office; when the unit was established; and when its work will be completed.

The Prime Minister: The Scott inquiry unit in the Cabinet Office was established in December 1992 with three full-time members, increased to five in April 1993. I am unable at this stage to say when the work of the unit will be completed.

Veterans

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister if he will reconsider his decision not to appoint a veterans' Minister.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 9 May 1994]: Responsibility for matters affecting war veterans, their widows and dependants, forms part of the departmental remit of a number of Ministers, as appropriate. There are no plans to change this arrangement.

HEALTH

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) qualified national health service nurses and midwives, (b) unqualified national health service nursing staff and (c) nursing learners were employed in each regional health authority in each year since 1989 (i) in numbers and (ii) as a percentage of the total NHS nursing and midwifery staff.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested will be placed in the Library.

Consultancies

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent by (a) regional health authorities, (b) district health authorities, (c) family health service authorities and (d) other health authorities on consultancies in the latest year for which figure are available.

Mr. Sackville: Expenditure on consultants is included under the category "external contract staffing and consultancy services", and cannot be separately identified. This information is published in Health and Personal Social Services Statistics, copies of which are available in the Library. The figures could include non-clinical services provided by outside bodies in areas such as cleaning, accountancy and computer services.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent by NHS trusts on consultancies in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: National health service trust expenditure on consultancy services alone is not available centrally. The provisional aggregate figure for NHS trust spending on external contract staffing and consultancy services was £43 million in 1992-93, the latest year for which a figure is available. This expenditure relates to services purchased from other trusts, health authorities and the private sector and includes, for example, linen supplies, transport and computing services as well as consultancy services.

The difference between the above figure and previous estimates is the result of further validation of source data by the NHS Executive.

Great Ormond Street Hospital

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the charitable income of Great Ormond Street hospital in the last two years.

Dr. Mawhinney: This is a matter for the Hospitals for Sick Children national health service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman, Sir Brian Hill, for details.

Children in Care

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children aged 15 years at 31 March 1991 were looked after by local authorities under care orders by placement.

Mr. Bowis: There were 2,920 children aged 15 in the care of English local authorities at 31 March 1991 by placement. A breakdown of the forms of placement is shown in the table.

Children aged 15 under care orders in the care of local authorities at 31 March 1991 by placement

	Number
All children aged 15 under care orders	2,920
Foster placements	1,363
In lodgings, living independently or residential employment	3
In community homes provided under the Child Care Act 1980	775
In voluntary children's homes and hostels	48
In accommodation for children with special educational needs	117
Under charge and control of parent, guardian, relative or friend	452
Young offender institution or prison establishment	18
Other placements[1]	144

[1] Other placements include: youth treatment centres, mother and baby homes, NHS or other establishments providing medical and/or nursing care, placed for adoption, children absent from agreed placement, and unspecified placements.

Pacemaker Leads

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many Medtronic pacing leads 4012 have been implanted into patients since 1987; and when the lead came on to the market in the United Kingdom; (2) how many deaths of patients implanted with Medtronic pacing lead 4012 have taken place each year since 1987.

Mr. Sackville: According to the national pacemaker database, the number of patients implanted with the Medtronic 4012 lead model since 1987 is 1,037.

The number of patient deaths since 1987, on a yearly basis has been:

	Number
1987	8
1988	11
1989	18
1990	31
1991	37
1992	37

None of which was lead-related.

These statistics include retrospective data since added to the NPD and updates information provided in the reply that I gave to the hon. Member on 21 March at columns 69-70. The NPD is subject to continual update.

The lead first became available on the United Kingdom market in late January/early February 1984.

Health Visitors and Nurses

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what work previously done by health visitors is now being done by other staff; and which other staff are doing this work.

Mr. Sackville: Many routine immunisations are now undertaken by practice nurses, freeing health visitors to target their skills more effectively. Among others, Strelley nurse development unit in Nottingham provides a fine example where health visitors are leading teams and managing patient care.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) student health visitors, (b) student district nurses, (c) student community psychiatric nurses and (d) school nurses in training there were in each of the last five years, by regional health authority.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is included in the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting annual report 1992-93, copies of which are available in the Library.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of practice nurses, expressed as whole-time equivalents, employed in the NHS for each of the last five years, by regional health authority.

Mr. Sackville: Between 1989 and 1993 the number of whole-time equivalent practice nurses in England increased by 107 per cent. from 4,629 to 9,606. The detailed information is shown in the table.

West Lindsey NHS Trust

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she has yet responded to the request by West Lindsey NHS Trust to reduce the size of its trust board; what representations she has received from local nursing professional organisations in respect of the effect of such a reduction; what consideration she has given to the possible child protection implications of the reduction in nurse management; and how she will ensure that her Department's guidance on this issue is followed locally.

Dr. Mawhinney: Ministers are considering whether to agree to the trust's request to reduce the number of its board members. Whatever the outcome of this consideration, the trust will continue to be required to appoint a registered nurse or registered midwife as an executive director under the National Health Service Trusts (Membership and Procedure) Regulations 1990. We expect all trusts to develop the role of nurse director in a way which will guarantee high standards of leadership and care.

Health System

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the Minister for Health's oral answer to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) of 22 March, Official Report, column 125, and her written answer of 10 May, Official Report, column 90, what evidence has been drawn to her attention of the existence of a two-tier health system within the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: A two-tier system does not operate in the national health service.

Occasionally, information about alleged differentials in service provision is brought to my attention from both within and outside the NHS. Such claims are investigated; they have been shown to reflect different purchasing contracts not "two-tierism". Trusts are reminded of the agreement with the British Medical Association that they may not offer contracts to one purchaser which would thereby disadvantage the patients of another. They are expected to ensure that any services provided conform with this agreement.

Health Authorities (Cash Allocation)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cash allocation for regional health authorities in England in 1993-94 and in 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: The final cash limits—capital and revenue—for regional health authorities for 1992-93 and 1993-94 are shown in the table.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will estimate expenditure on NHS trusts for 1994-95.

Dr. Mawhinney: [holding answer 12 May 1994]: Expenditure by national health service purchasers for patient services provided by NHS trusts for 1994-95 is estimated at £17,058,059,000.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Service

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what satistics he has on the number of former parliamentary candidates who have been recruited to the permanent home civil service.

Mr. Waldegrave: No such statistics are kept.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Civil Service Commission in relation to the recruitment of Mr. Paul Martin to the permanent home civil service, and in relation to the recruitment of former parliamentary candidates generally.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have had no consultations with the First Civil Service Commissioner on this subject. There is no bar to the employment in the civil service of a person who, although previously politically active, takes a decision to seek a career in the service and is willing to abide by the rules on the political activities of serving civil servants once appointed.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what guidelines he has issued in relation to the recruitment of previous parliamentary candidates into the permanent home civil service; what proposals he has for maintenance of party political neutrality within the permanent home civil service in circumstances where previous parliamentary candidates have been recruited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The principle of selection on merit on the basis of fair and open competition precludes previous political activity being a consideration in civil service recruitment. The rules on political activities in the conduct chapter of the Civil Service Management Code, a copy of which is in the Library, apply to all staff according to the nature of their work. A recruit accepts those rules as a condition of service.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what guidelines he has issued in relation to the treatment of references from party political or ministerial sources in relation to recruitment to the permanent home civil service.

Mr. Waldegrave: No guidelines have been issued by my Department relating specifically to references from party political or ministerial sources in relation to recruitment to the permanent home civil service. Where references are sought, their purpose is to assist the selectors in assessing suitability for the grade or post concerned in relation to the qualities, experience and qualifications required.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on what date the application of Paul Martin for recruitment to the permanent home civil service was received by the Civil Service Commission; and on what date Mr. Martin (a) took his examination, (b) was interviewed, (c) had his references taken up and (d) commenced employment in the permanent civil service.

Mr. Waldegrave: Mr. Martin submitted an application form for the administrative fast stream entry in September 1992, sat the qualifying test in October 1992, attended the civil service selection board in December 1992 and the final selection board in February 1993, and took up employment in the civil service in June 1993. References were taken up in November 1992.

TRANSPORT

Public Transport Fares

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish an index showing the real increase in fares on (a) London buses, (b) London Underground, (c) all London transport, (d) Network SouthEast and (e) all British Rail in each year since 1984-85, taking 1984-85 as the base and showing the increase in both actual and real terms.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is given in the table.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish an index showing the increase in child fares on (a) London buses, (b) London Underground, (c) all London transport, (d) Network SouthEast and (e) all British Rail, for each year since 1984-85 taking 1984-85 as the base and showing the increase in both actual and real terms.

Mr. Norris: The information available for London buses, London Underground and London Transport bus and underground services combined is shown in the tables. Comparable figures for British Rail and Network SouthEast are not readily available.

The figures shown in the tables are for child ordinary tickets only. They do not include the effect of changes in the price of child season tickets, travelcards and passes, as this information is not available.

Railway Deaths

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in rank order by year for the last 10 years, the five most significant causes of passenger fatalities on the railways.

Mr. Freeman: The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate maintains records of railway accidents and casualties. It publishes a breakdown of these records in the "Annual Report on Railway Safety in Great Britain". Copies are available in the House of Commons Library.

The table sets out the five most common causes of passenger fatalities and the number which occurred in each year from 1983.

Significant Causes of Passenger Fatalities on the Railways—1983 to 1993

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 6 May, Official Report, column 652, regarding the modernisation of the west coast main line, what was his original estimate of the time necessary for modernisation; what is his current estimate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: When my right hon. Friend announced the project last December the best estimate available, from the work done by our banking advisers, was seven to 10 years. That remains our most recent advice. The current project definition study will produce firmer estimates of the options for carrying out the improvements, consistent with the need to keep train services running.

Vehicle Licensing

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what change has been requested by Teledata Ltd. to the target level of sales of marks specified in the contract with the DVLA.

Mr. Key: There have been no representations from Teledata Ltd to change the basis of its contractual agreement with the agency for the provision of its telesales facility.

Driving Standards Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the cost of work associated with the market testing and preparation of the in-house bid for the booking service of the Driving Standards Agency.

Mr. Key: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Driving Standards Agency under its chief executive, Dr. John Ford. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Reply from S. J. Ford to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 12 May 1994:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your question about the costs of work associated with the market testing and preparation of the in-house bid for the booking service of the Driving Standards Agency.

Expenditure up to the end of March 1994 has been £30,000 of which £20,000 was for consultancy support for the DSA market testing unit and the remainder for the salary costs of that unit. Expenditure on consultancy support for the preparation of the in-house bid will be included in the figures for the current financial year.

Asthma

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the research papers he has commissioned on the possible link between motor car pollution and asthma; and if he will make a statement concerning the risk of asthma in respect of children at roadside level.

Mr. Key: The Department of Health's committee on the medical effects of air pollutants has appointed a sub-group to examine the evidence of links between air pollution and asthma. The sub-group is due to report around the end of this year.

While links between air pollution and the incidence of asthma are not yet proven, there is evidence that pollution from vehicles can worsen symptoms for existing asthmatics. The Government have taken stringent measures to reduce emissions from vehicles, so that levels of nitrogen oxides, carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons and particulates are expected to fall significantly in future years.

Concessionary Fares

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review his policies concerning concessionary travel for pensioners and introduce initiatives to widen the use of concessionary schemes.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans to review our policies nor do we think new initiatives are required, as we have put in place the framework that gives local authorities discretion to provide concessionary travel if they wish. Since most pensioners use public transport services for local journeys, we believe that the decision on whether to provide concessionary travel for elderly people is a matter for individual local authorities. They are best placed to judge local needs, and to weigh the costs involved against their other priorities.

We have consistently said that the current link between eligibility for concessionary travel and pensionable age would be reviewed if the state pension age is changed. We therefore indicated in the Department of Social Security's White Paper about the phased equalisation of the state pension age, issued last year, Cm 2420, para 3.17, that the difference in treatment of men and women for concessionary fares should clearly not continue when it has been abolished for state pensions. We said that we would be consulting on the precise phasing-in of the change.

British Rail

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total cost to date of erecting signs at British Rail stations informing the public about the ownership of the track and rolling stock; and what will be the total cost of the programme on completion.

Mr. Freeman: I am not aware of any such changes in signing of stations managed by British Rail. My reply to a question by the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) on 27 April at column 223 gave information on the renewal of signs at the 13 major stations managed independently by Railtrack.

Road Improvements

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what features have been incorporated into the design of the Swainswick bypass to minimise the environmental impact on Solsbury hill;

Mr. Key [holding answer 12 May 1994]: We have avoided Little Solsbury hill routeing the new road some 500 m west of the summit and we have minimised the land taken for this bypass. In addition, we intend to plant many thousands of indigenous trees and shrubs in this locality and throughout the scheme, both on-site and off, to mitigate the effects of the route on the landscape.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his latest estimates of the costs of the Swainswick and Batheaston bypasses; how these differ from earlier estimates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 12 May 1994]: Our latest estimate was contained in the recently published "Trunk Roads in England 1994 Review" as £75·2 million. In 1990, at the time of the public inquiry, we estimated the cost at £59·1 million.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans his Department has for incorporating the A46/A36 route from Southampton to the M4 into the trans-European network, for developing it as a motorway link.

Mr. Key [holding answer 12 May 1994]: None.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the reasons for making the Swainswick and Batheaston bypasses dual rather than single carriageway.

Mr. Key [holding answer 12 May 1994]: A single carriageway road would not be adequate for the amount of traffic using this trunk route.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what criteria would justify the reopening of a public inquiry into a road improvement scheme after a decision by him; what procedures would need to be followed to request such a move; and if he will make a statement;

(2) on how many occasions within the last 10 years following a decision by the Secretary of State after a public inquiry into a road improvement scheme the inquiry has been reopened; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 12 May 1994]: There have been no such instances of an inquiry being re-opened after my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment have announced their decision on a road improvement scheme. Indeed, there are no provisions for re-opening an inquiry in such an event. There are, however, certain circumstances, under the provisions of the Highways (Inquiries Procedure) Rules 1976, whereby an inquiry can be re-opened before a final decision on a scheme is made.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what reasons underlay his decision to terminate the contract for the sale of marks at the DVLA won by Teledata Ltd. in 1989.

Mr. Key: The contract awarded in 1989 to the company then trading as Teledata Ltd. was terminated because of contractual difficulties over the sales techniques that the company wanted to employ.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Addis Ababa Meeting

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the meeting in Addis Ababa between 25 and 29 April between General Aideed and the head of the Somali National Movement; and what his position is on this.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I understand that General Aideed and Abdirahman Tur agreed that the Somali National Movement would consider participating in a federal system in Somalia. We welcome all constructive efforts at reconciliation in Somalia.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the meeting in Arusha on 5 May concerning Rwanda; if Britian was represented; and what are the implications for the relief effort.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We regret that the meeting in Arusha, which was attended by our high commissioner in Tanzania as an observer, failed to reach an agreement on a cease-fire. We hope that the countries of the region will continue their efforts to bring a halt to the killing, without which it will be impossible to make the relief effort fully effective.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken to impose an arms embargo on Rwanda.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The statement of the President of the United Nations Security Council of 30 April underlined the willingness of the council in principle to consider an arms embargo against Rwanda. Options for United Nations action in Rwanda are under consideration by the United Nations secretariat in New York.

Ancestral Graves

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the proposed visit by Ilois and their associates to the British Indian Ocean Territory and Chagos archipelago and what was his response to the approaches of the Comité Ilois de l'Organisation Fraternelle on proposed visits to see ancestral graves.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: An application has been made to the Commissioner of the British Indian Ocean Territory to allow a group of Ilois and their associates to visit ancestral graves in the territory. The application has been referred to the British Indian Ocean immigration authorities for a decision.

"Dispatches" Interview

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the full interview given by the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, the hon. Member for Morecambe and Lunesdale (Mr. Lennox-Boyd), to Fulmar Television and Film, part of which was broadcast on the "Dispatches" programme on Channel 4 on 4 and 6 May.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The hon. Member should approach Fulmar Television and Film.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the Canadian proposals put to the preparatory committee meeting for the 1995 nuclear non-proliferation treaty conference, in respect of the division of the conference into a review group and an extension group.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Canada has circulated informally a paper on the 1995 non-proliferation treaty extension and review conference putting forward a number of ideas, one of which is that an extension committee should be established at the conference, in addition to the three main committees that have been set up by previous review conferences. The proposal has yet to be discussed formally. We expect this may happen in the context of discussion on the rules of procedure at the remaining two preparatory committee meetings.

China

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will hold talks with the representatives of the Government of China to ensure that the continued trading in (a) rhinoceros horn and (b) other prohibited products is effectively policed during the transfer of the colony to China; and what talks have already been held.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Both United Kingdom and China are parties to CITES—the convention on international trade in endangered species—which effectively bans international trade in the most endangered species such as the rhino. Hong Kong is included in the United Kingdom's ratification of the convention and was recently commended by the CITES standing committee for its rigorous implementation.

Yemen

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the situation in Yemen and the position of British nationals there.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are deeply concerned about the fighting that has erupted in the Republic of Yemen and call on all parties to cease hostilities and negotiate a peaceful settlement.

A specially chartered British Airways flight evacuated 218 British, European Union and Commonwealth nationals on 9 May. Two RAF Hercules carried out a further evacuation on 12 May. Consular advice to those who have chosen to remain in the Yemen is to act with extreme caution and to keep in regular contact with the embassy.

Bosnia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what dates and in what numbers patients from Bosnia have been flown to Britain for treatment in British hospitals.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Statistics are available only for patients who come here under the United Nations medical evacuation programme for treatment by the NHS. The details are: 9 August 1993—one; 15 August 1993—21; 27 November 1993—three; 20 December 1993—seven; 19 January 1994—one; 18 February 1994—12; 9 March 1994—four; 26 April 1994—12; 10 May 1994—one.

Oxford Research Group Seminar

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who represented his Department at the seminar on "Britain and the Non-Proliferation Regime: 1995 and Beyond," held in Oxford on 19 April, organised by the Oxford research group; and what benefits accrued from the departmental representation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The head of the non-proliferation department within the Foreign and Commonwealth Office attended. He delivered a statement on the United Kingdom's policy on nuclear non-proliferation.

East Timor

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received from his Portuguese counterpart in regard to the outcome of the United Nations sponsored talks between Portugal and of Indonesia on East Timor.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the outcome of the talks between Portugal and Indonesia on East Timor held on 6 May.

Mr. Goodlad: The Portuguese Government have provided European Union partners with the text of the communiqué issued at the end of the latest round of talks with Indonesia on East Timor. The two sides have agreed on a number of confidence-building measures, including meetings with leading East Timorese supporters and opponents of integration, and a visit to East Timor in June by the special rapporteur of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights. The UN Secretary-General has been asked to identify a series of issues for consideration by the Foreign Ministers of Portugal and Indonesia in advance of the next round of talks in January 1995, including possible avenues towards achieving a just, comprehensive and internationally acceptable solution.

I am arranging for a copy of the communiqué issued by the UN Secretariat to be placed in the Library of the House.

Kosovo

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what statement the Minister of State, the right hon. and learned Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg), made in Pristina on 5 May about the relationship of Kosovo to Serbia and the rights of Albanians.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My discussions in Pristina on 5 May were confidential. I did not make a formal statement, but in comments to the press I repeated our view that the political, civil and cultural rights of the ethnic Albanian population should be respected and their autonomy restored within existing international borders.

Environmental Impact Assessment Directive

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what will be the effect of the infringement procedures begun on 20 April by the EFTA surveillance authority against Finland, Austria and Norway for failing to implement within the set time period the environmental impact assessment directive, on the elegibility of those countries to join the European Union.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Proceedings by the EFTA surveillance authority under the European Economic Area agreement will not effect the eligibility of Finland, Austria and Norway to join the European Union. Article 171 of the treaty of accession—a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library—provides for any cases pending before the EFTA surveillance authority at the time of accession to be transmitted without delay to the European Commission, which will continue to deal with them under the relevant Community provisions.

Tunisia

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made, or plans to make in the future, to the Tunisian Government on the incidence of arbitrary arrests, torture and detention without trial and that country's public commitment to the promotion of human rights.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: With our European Union partners, we raised our concerns with Habib Ben Yahia, the Tunisian Foreign Minister, during the last EC/Tunisia Co-operation Council meeting.

Kyrgyzstan

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on diplomatic, cultural and commercial relations with the Government of Kyrgyzstan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Diplomatic relations with Kyrgyzstan are good. Her Majesty's ambassador to Kazakhstan is also accredited to Kyrgyzstan. Embassy staff visit Bishkek regularly.

Commercial links with Kyrgyzstan are still developing. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Inner Cities and Construction is due to lead a trade-related construction mission to Kazakhstan and Kyrgyzstan from 30 May to 4 June.

South Africa

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British passport holders resident in South Africa renewed their passports in (a) 1993 and (b) the first four months of 1994.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1993 a total of 30,591 passports were issued to British citizens and other British nationals resident in South Africa. In the first four months of this year, 13,247 passports were also issued.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many employees have worked on a full or part-time basis with the Scott inquiry liaison unit set up within his Department; when the unit was established; and when its work will be completed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The FCO's Scott inquiry unit has three full-time posts. A total of seven people have filled these posts since the unit was established in December 1992. An eighth person was seconded full time to the unit for a short period in 1993. In addition, other officials have given part-time assistance on an ad hoc basis.

The unit's work will be completed when Lord Justice Scott publishes his report and follow-up work by the unit has been undertaken.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many employees have worked on a full or part-time basis with the Scott inquiry liaison unit set up within his Department; when the unit was established; and when its work will be completed.

Mr. Aitken: The Ministry of Defence Scott inquiry unit is made up of three officials, all of whom are employed on a full-time basis. A fourth full-time official was employed between September 1993 and March 1994. The unit was established on 30 November 1992 and its work will be completed after Lord Justice Scott has reported.

DEFENCE

Vacant Properties

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many vacant residential properties were owned by his Department as of 20 April.

Mr. Hanley: As at 31 March 1994, the latest date for which figures are available, my Department owned 9,882 vacant married quarters and 105 vacant MOD civilian houses. In addition 1,431 vacant married quarters and 38 vacant MOD civilian houses were in the process of being sold. The majority of the vacant married quarters were either undergoing or awaiting major works or modernisation, held for unit deployments, or already allocated to service families who were due to move in shortly.

Mr. Paul Martin

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Paul Martin was recruited as an unestablished civil servant; by what means the posts in his Department were advertised for recruitment; on what date; which kind of recruitment panel interviewed him; and for what length of contract.

Mr. Aitken: Mr. Martin was recruited as an established and permanent civil servant by Recruitment and Assessment Services. This followed advertising for the central competition for fast stream administrators and managers in the national press and through graduate careers services during 1992. The recruitment process involved interviews and other selection tests by the civil service selection board and the final selection board, whose members include serving civil servants and external representatives.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date Mr. Paul Martin commenced employment as a permanent civil servant; and on what date he became an established civil servant in his Department.

Mr. Aitken: On 14 June 1993 in both cases.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he provided a reference for Mr. Paul Martin for the purposes of his recruitment into the permanent home civil service.

Mr. Aitken: No.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the grade, duties and job description of Mr. Paul Martin (a) at the time of his suspension, (b) at the commencement of his employment and (c) at the time of any material change during the course of his employment.

Mr. Aitken: Mr. Martin joined the Ministry of Defence as a higher executive officer (development), a training grade.

He has held only one post, in which his duties have involved policy work on bilateral defence relations with Austria, Finland, Sweden and Switzerland, on questions relating to defence and the development of the European Union and, since January 1994, on arrangements to implement the partnership for peace initiative taken at the NATO summit. In carrying out these duties, he has been responsible for providing his line managers with draft written briefing for Ministers, senior officials and senior military officers.

Anti-personnel Mines

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 April, Official Report, column 416, if he will make a statement on his plans for introducing anti-personnel mines with self-destruct and self-neutralising mechanisms; and what percentage failure rates for these mechanisms will be set.

Mr. Aitken: We are currently considering our future requirements for anti-personnel mines. We anticipate that if any new mines were introduced they would have a self-destruct or self-neutralising capability. The specifications for these mines, including failure rates of the self-destruct or self-neutralising mechanism, would be determined as part of the procurement process.

Service Personnel (Redundancy)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel (a) successfully and (b) unsuccessfully applied for redundancy in each of the last three years.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 12 May 1994]: The information requested is as follows:

Royal Naval Services (RN and RM)

	Successful	Unsuccessful
Officers
Phase 1	65	25
Phase 2	365	146
Phase 3	70	8
Ratings/Marines
Phase 1	273	n/a
Phase 2	758	822
Phase 3	2,326	1,020

n/a = Not available.

Notes:

1. Phase 1 redundees left by 31 March 1993, phase 2 by 30 November 1993 and phase 3 redundees will have left by November 1994.
2. Detailed records of unsuccessful applicants for phase 1 are no longer available.

Army

	Successful	Unsuccessful
Officers
Phase 1 (1992-93)	695	n/a
Phase 2 (1993-94)	628	n/a
Phase 3 (1994-95)	578	n/a

	Successful	Unsuccessful
Officers
Phase 1	281	46
Phase 2	315	213
Airmen/women
Phase 1	687	84
Phase 2	1,769	5

Note:

Royal Air Force redundancies in Phase 1 relate to financial year 1992-93 and part of financial year 1993-94; Phase 2 redundancies cover remainder of financial year 1993-94 and financial year 1994-95.

Pregnant Service Women

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the costs of compensation to Army officers and other Army ranks who have lost employment and possible promotion by becoming pregnant following the decision of the tribunal in Glasgow on the application of European guidance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 12 May 1994]: The High Court ruled in December 1991 that the policy of discharging service women compulsorily if they became pregnant was in breach of the European equal treatment directive which had taken effect in August 1978. Service women who were discharged on the grounds of pregnancy between August 1978 and August 1990, when the policy was discontinued, are therefore eligible for compensation for any losses sustained as a result of their unlawful discharge.

As at 4 May 1994, 1,288 valid claims for compensation had been received from former Army officers and other ranks in response to which my Department has made offers of compensation totalling about £7 million. So far, 758 of these claims have been settled at a cost of about £4·6 million, mostly as a result of claimants accepting MOD offers. It is not possible to say how many of the remainder will do so or will choose instead to pursue their cases to industrial tribunals. Nor can my Department predict how much the tribunals will choose to award.

The upper limit of £11,000 on the amount that tribunals could award in sex discrimination cases has been removed following a decision of the European Court of Justice. My Department will, however, continue to press for awards to be based on realistic career prospects, taking account of the fact that only a small proportion of service women or, indeed, service personnel generally, choose to complete their term of engagement. Cases such as that in Glasgow, where the tribunal decided that the claimant would have remained in the Army until the age of 55 and would have reached the rank of colonel, are not necessarily typical, and we shall continue to appeal against individual awards whenever there are good grounds for doing so.

SCOTLAND

Anton Piller Orders

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many times in each of the last 10 years an Anton Piller order has been served on someone residing in Scotland; and whether he will make a statement as to the operation of such orders in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pigmeat

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the subsidies and support provided by each member country of the EC for the production of pigmeat.

Mr. Jack: Community-wide information on national support for pig producers in EC member states is not available from the European Commission. The European Commission is responsible for monitoring and approving nationals aids in all member states and has power to require the withdrawal or alteration of aids it considers to be incompatible with Community law, including the repayment of any aid paid illegally.

Internet

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans her Department has (a) to utilise the Internet, (b) to make available on the Internet press releases and other departmental information which the public may wish to have access to and (c) to use the Internet as a means of increasing the openness of her Department.

Mr. Jack: MAFF's press releases are issued electronically by the Central Office of Information and available to subscribers to FT Profile, Reuters Textline and POLIS. They are also accessible to users of the Internet via the Date-Star Dialogue (Europe) or Mead/Lexis/Nexis systems.

There are no plans for MAFF to use the Internet.

Marine Conservation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she expects publication of the consultative paper on the marine conservation and enforcement duties for the coastal zone between the low water mark and the six-mile offshore limit; and what representations she has had from the Association of Sea Fisheries Committees in relation to its contents.

Mr. Jack: I intend to consult shortly on new environmental powers for sea fisheries committees.

EC Directives (Effect on Business)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations were made to her Department by Unipac Packaging Industries, Sunzest Trading Ltd., Del Monte Ltd. or Polly Peck International about the effect of EC directives on their business; which were the directives concerned; and when such representations were made.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 12 May 1994]: The information is not readily available and could not be produced without disproportionate cost.

Diseased Animals

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps she has taken to prevent potentially diseased cattle originating outside the EU from being imported to the United Kingdom via European Union countries; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: All member states are required to operate common control measures to prevent diseased cattle from third countries entering the Community. Live animals may be imported into the Community only through an approved border inspection post and must undergo full documentary, identity and physical checks by an official veterinarian before being permitted to enter into free circulation within the Community. Animals originating in a third country destined for the United Kingdom but imported into the Community via another member state are also subject to spot checks at their place of destination in the United Kingdom. Where there is evidence that checks have not been properly applied in another member state we take the matter up with the Commission and the veterinary authorities of the member state of entry.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many head of cattle were targeted in the tracing by her Department to be tested for the presence of foot-and-mouth disease vaccination antibodies; how many were actually traced and tested; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will make a statement on the policy of the branding on each shoulder with a V of traced cattle displaying foot-and-mouth disease vaccination antibodies and allowing these cattle to remain with the herds in which they have been found;

(3) which parties were consulted before deciding on the policy of branding of cattle displaying foot-and-mouth disease vaccination antibodies; and if she will make a statement;

(4) if she will make a statement on the outcome of her Department's plans to remove all cattle displaying foot-and-mouth disease vaccination antibodies from the national herd by 1 August 1993;

(5) if all the cattle involved in the tracing of foot-and-mouth disease vaccination antibodies by her Department have been found.

Mr. Soames: Of the 994 cattle known to have been imported into Great Britain from the Czech Republic and Poland since the autumn of 1992, 933 were traced and tested for the presence of antibodies to foot and mouth disease. It was not possible to trace all the animals because of poor movement records at the importers' premises and problems caused by re-tagging and subsequent onward movements. A total of 190 Czech and 59 Polish animals were found to be seropositive to FMD. All the animals concerned had undergone a documentary check after arrival in Great Britain and all were certified by the veterinary authorities in their country of origin as being in accordance with Community import rules.

Community rules permit the importation only of those animals which have never been vaccinated against FMD. Vaccinated animals can carry the FMD virus without showing clinical signs of the disease. Although there was no evidence that the seropositive cattle were carrying live virus and could thus be a threat to native livestock, the implications of the incident were potentially serious. In order not to jeopardise the United Kingdom's health status, the cattle were initially placed under restriction on their holdings until arrangements could be made for their re-export or slaughter. A deadline of 1 August 1993 was originally given for this to take place. Ministry veterinary officials visited both the Czech Republic and Poland and their veterinary authorities accepted that the animals had been certified incorrectly. However, despite lengthy and intensive negotiations between MAFF and the Czech authorities, and between the original British importer and the Czech export company, arrangements for the return of the affected animals to the Czech Republic could not be agreed. Similarly, discussions between the Ministry and the Polish veterinary authorities proved fruitless. As a result the deadline of 1 August was extended and owners of seropositive animals were given the option of slaughter of the animals or their permanent retention on their current holdings subject to restrictions, including freeze branding, until they are slaughtered.

There is no requirement to consult outside parties about measures intended to prevent the possible spread of disease.

Fishing Industry

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fishing vessels owned in other EC countries are registered in the United Kingdom; how many United Kingdom-owned fishing vessels are registered in other EC countries; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I understand from the Registrar General of Shipping and Seamen that at the end of 1993 there were about 100 fishing vessels registered in the United Kingdom which are either wholly or largely owned by nationals of another Member State. There are more than 11,000 fishing vessels on the United Kingdom register. RSS does not hold figures for United Kingdom-owned vessels registered abroad.

Drift Nets

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 9 May, Official Report, column 40, what measures she will propose to the Fisheries Council to enforce compliance with the European Union ban on drift nets longer than 2·5 km.

Mr. Jack: It is for the Commission to make proposals to the Council. Their proposals, to which I referred in my answer of 9 May, include additional enforcement measures for the drift net fisheries.

Monday 16 May 1994

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Servants (Business Appointments)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many civil servants in his Department have applied through the business appointments system to take up an outside appointment (a) as an independent consultant, (b) in a firm of consultants and (c) in other employment; how many have been referred to the Advisory Committee on Business Appointments; and how many were granted.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 6 May 1994, Official Report, column 668.

TREASURY

Beer Imports

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to prevent unaccompanied duty-paid imports of beer.

Sir John Cope: The European Commissioner responsible for taxation policy has confirmed the United Kingdom Government's view that United Kingdom excise duty and VAT must be paid on unaccompanied duty-paid imports of excise goods. Customs are performing checks using intelligence techniques to detect individuals attempting to avoid duty payment. In this way illegal unaccompanied imports may be detected in transit, at the recipient's premises, or subsequently.

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the regional distribution throughout the United Kingdom of the destination of duty-paid imports of beer.

Sir John Cope: Duty-paid beer in quantities below the indicative limits may be imported freely by private travellers for their own use. The distribution can be anywhere throughout the United Kingdom. Customs have no means of knowing the final destination of such travellers and have therefore made no estimate of their regional distribution.

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has of the involvement of individuals with a criminal record, and of organised criminal groups, in the illegal importing and resale of duty-paid beer brought into the United Kingdom ostensibly for personal use.

Sir John Cope: Although there is evidence of petty criminals engaging in this illegal activity, there is no evidence of organised crime being involved.

Open Government

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his Department's plans to create more openness in government by publishing Government press releases and other information on a free access electronic news or bulletin board system.

Mr. Nelson: I have no plans at present to provide a free access service.

VAT

Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Government will continue to support the present VAT zero rate floor limit for refunds of goods bought in the United Kingdom by tourists from outside the European Union.

Sir John Cope: The Government support the present arrangements and have registered their opposition to the European Commission proposal for a minimum threshold before non-EC visitors can claim a VAT refund.

Trade Deficit

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the change in the visible trade deficit with non-European Union countries between February and March.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 12 May 1994]: Latest data show a visible trade deficit of £718 million in March, compared with £657 million in February.

Alcohol (Duty)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what procedures are in place for assessing and collecting duty from cross-channel travellers who return with opportunity purchases of alcohol for sale through businesses; what advice is given to small businesses on the procedures; and what plans he has to introduce a duty collection facility at Dover.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 13 May 1994]: The movement of commercial consignments of excise goods between member states is subject to procedures laid down in EC legislation, and these have been reproduced by Customs in notices which are freely available to the trade and public. Customs recognise the need to facilitate purchasers who have acquired excise goods outside of the established procedures. They are examining the existing arrangements to see if greater flexibility can be introduced. This includes the possibility of duty collection points at the ports.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Genetically Engineered Foods

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what specific proposals she has to ensure the labelling of all foods the production of which has involved genetic engineering; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Government have accepted the recommendations of the Food Advisory Committee on the labelling of foods produced as a result of genetic modification. They are that mandatory labelling rules should apply in all cases where a foodstuff:

(a) contains a copy gene originally derived from a human;
(b) contains a copy gene originally derived from an animal which is the subject of religious dietary restrictions; or
(c) is a plant or microbial material containing a copy gene originally derived from an animal.

These rules would not apply if the inserted gene had been destroyed during processing and was not, therefore, present in the food.

Labelling of such foods is being considered by the EC Council of Ministers as part of a proposal on novel foods.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make it her policy to make mandatory the assessment procedures for the safety of genetically engineered foods in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: We are currently at an advanced stage in negotiating mandatory procedures to apply throughout the whole of the European Union.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many parliamentary questions, in the period November 1992 to March 1993 were answered with the response that the information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost; how many were referred on to an agency chief executive; and, in each case, what percentage of the total number of questions asked this constituted.

Mr. Jack: According to the POLIS database eight parliamentary questions answered by Ministers in this Department in the period 1 November 1992 and 31 March 1993 were given a response either that the information requested was not held centrally or that the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost and eight were referred to agency chief executives. Both those figures represent less than 1 per cent. of all written answers given in the same period.

Milk Marketing

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the objections she has received in response to the second consultation document of reorganisation in the milk marketing scheme; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I am placing in the Library of the House a copy of those formal responses to the consultation exercise which the Ministry has made publicly available.

My right hon. Friends the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for Wales will consider the responses to the consultation exercise when deciding whether to approve the reorganisation scheme under the terms of the Agriculture Act 1993.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 18 April, Official Report, column 412, if she will describe the procedures in place for prosecuting non-United Kingdom companies in breach of the Welfare of Animals During Transit Order 1992.

Mr. Soames: Acting directly or from information received from an inspector of this Department or a local authority, the police have general powers of arrest and detention under section 25 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 in respect of non-United Kingdom nationals suspected of having committed an offence under the Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1992. These powers have been exercised on a number of occasions and offenders successfully prosecuted.

If a non-United Kingdom company has an agent in the United Kingdom authorised to accept service of a summons, it would, according to the circumstances of the case, be possible to bring a prosecution against such a company for offences against the order.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 13 April, Official Report, column 180, to which local authorities statements have been given by her Department's staff with respect to possible prosecutions.

Mr. Soames: Such statements have been given to Hampshire county council.

Pig Producers

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she expects to receive from the EC its report into allegations of subsidising of pig producers and pigmeat processors by certain member states; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 9 May 1994]: As a direct result of United Kingdom pressure on the Commission to investigate aid to French pig producers, the Commission published in its Official Journal of 15 April its intention to open proceedings under article 93(2) of the treaty against two French aid schemes.

We have sent in our comments to the Commission urging an immediate decision that the schemes be declared illegal and demanding the recovery of any aid paid. If the Commission cannot take an immediate decision, we have asked that interim measures be introduced prohibiting any further payment of aid pending a final decision.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Renewable Energy Advisory Committee

Mr. Mudie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the members and dates of membership of the Renewable Energy Advisory Committee and of each committee established by the Renewable Energy Advisory Committee on each major technology.

Mr. Eggar: The list of members and dates of membership of the Renewable Energy Advisory Committee is as follows:

Renewable Energy Advisory Committee

Key: DTI—Department of Trade and Industry.
DoE—Department of the Environment.
MAFF—Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.
ETSU—Energy Technology Support Unit.
EPSRC—Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council.
BRE—Building Research Establishment.
OST—Cabinet Office; Office of Science and Technology.

Aircraft Projects

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy concerning the future of large aircraft projects.

Mr. Sainsbury: DTI assists United Kingdom aerospace companies to participate in international collaborative projects wherever this is appropriate, and is in close contact with the United Kingdom industry on the proposed future large aircraft development.

Electricity Industry

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will investigate the circumstances of the departure of the chairman of East Midlands Electricity, and the closure of the electrical contracting business.

Mr. Eggar: Both issues are commercial matters for East Midlands Electricity plc.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will hold an inquiry in the joint venture of the East Midlands and the Yorkshire electricity boards on the retailing operations following the closure of the electrical contracting business operations in Ossett in West Yorkshire.

Mr. Eggar: These are commercial matters for the companies concerned.

Mr. Burns: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the appointment of the Director General of Electricity Supply.

Mr. Eggar: I am pleased to announce the reappointment of Professor Stephen Littlechild as Director General of Electricity Supply for a second five-year term. The new term will commence on 1 September 1994. Since 1989 Professor Littlechild has played an important role in the creation of a competitive electricity market and I welcome his continuing involvement in the development of this sector of the economy.

Coal Industry

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what discussions he has had with British Coal about the proposal to contractualise the basic element of the current British Coal redundancy scheme;

(2) what discussions he has had with British Coal about the proposed employment package which is currently being put to the mining unions.

Mr. Eggar: Both my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and I meet the chairman of British Coal as necessary to discuss a variety of coal industry matters.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who will guarantee the contractualised redundancy scheme in the event of a colliery business failure after privatisation of the coal industry.

Mr. Eggar: The Government, through the statutory redundancy payments scheme, ensure that all qualifying redundant employees receive a basic level of compensation. Where employers are unable to pay, for example in the case of receivership, this payment is met by the Department of Employment.

Any redundancy arrangements after the privatisation of British Coal in excess of the statutory requirements will be a matter for private sector employers. Where employees are transferred to a new employer and the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 apply, the new employer will take on contractual obligations which exist at the time of transfer.

Trade Marks Bill

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the consultation exercise his Department has been carrying out on the subject of lookalikes in the context of the Trade Marks Bill.

Mr. McLoughlin: The consultation exercise was carried out via the Standing Advisory Committee on Industrial Property, because this afforded a readily available mechanism for seeking the views of those with experience in this field. The consultation was not, however, restricted to members of SACIP, and comments were received from others, including the British Producers and Brand Owners Group and individual companies.

The overwhelming majority of the views received was against taking action in the Bill. Many made the point that this is not a trade marks issue, as the main characteristic of a lookalike product is that it does not copy a trade mark. This is also the Government's view.

There was a widespread feeling among those who commented that—compared with other countries—there may be an issue of unfair competition to be addressed. The Government believe, however, that the Bill, which broadens the definition of what may be registered as a trade mark and also widens the rights conferred, will improve the position by allowing shapes and distinctive packaging to be registered, and should be given a chance to work. If, once the Bill has been in force for a reasonable period, brand owners can demonstrate that there continues to be a problem, the Government would be prepared to look again at the situation.

Letter (Combat 18)

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will consult the chairman of the Post Office about the circumstances in which the contents of a letter posted at Streatham High Road main post office on 29 April at 11.30 am became known to a member of Combat 18; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: This is an operational matter for the Post Office. It is, of course, a criminal offence under sections 56 and 58 of the Post Office Act 1953 to tamper with mail.

Cable Companies

Mr. David Howell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what procedures have been laid down to enable members of the public to raise complaints against the operation of cable companies installing their equipment on highways and also on private property; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Cable television operators are granted powers under section 10 of the Telecommunications Act 1984 to install cable systems in the maintainable highway and, with appropriate consent, on private land. Their licences include conditions designed to ensure that they operate in a responsible manner and adhere to all relevant street works legislation. Street works in the maintainable highway are subject to the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991, and its associated regulations, which are enforced by local highway authorities. Where work is undertaken on private land, it should be with the consent of the landowner, and any complaint arising from that work is a matter for the landowner and the cable operator concerned. Many cable operators provide freephone numbers to deal with inquiries.

Chernobyl

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the progress being made in discussions between the Ukrainian Government and representatives of the G7 to eliminate the danger of radiation threat from the Chernobyl nuclear power plant.

Mr. Eggar: A G7 mission met representatives of the Ukrainian Government on 2 to 4 May. These were exploratory talks designed to prepare the ground for consideration, at the forthcoming G7 economic summit, in the context of nuclear safety in eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union, of how best we might work with Ukraine to secure the G7 objective of early closure of high-risk reactors such as Chernobyl.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 24 March, Official Report, columns 428-29, how many consultancy contracts have been let by his Department's executive agencies in the last five years; and at what cost.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 29 April 1994]: I have asked the chief executives of the agencies to reply to this question, as it falls into the category of day-to-day operational matters.

Letter from Mike Hoddinott to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 16 May 1994:

Your recent Parliamentary Question to the President of the Board of Trade asked how many consultancy contracts have been let by the Department's executive agencies in the last five years; and at what cost. Details in respect of Accounts Services Agency are as follows:

Contracts	Number	Cost in £'000
1993-94	19	164

The costs for each year include VAT although Account Services Agency had separate VAT registration for the years 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Letter from David Durham to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 16 May 1994:

You tabled the following Parliamentary Question:

"To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his Answer of 24th March, Official Report, columns 428-9, how many consultancy contracts have been let by his Department's executive agencies in the last five years; and at what cost."

I have been asked to reply to this question, as Chief Executive of Companies House Executive Agency. The following information is, of course, only relevant to this Agency.

The number of consultancy contracts let and the costs involved were as follows:

	Number	Cost £
1993-94	20	147,271
1992-93	23	205,075
1991-92	17	231,653

The cost of consultancy in 1990-91 was £283,441. Because of changes to our financial systems in 1991, I regret that the precise numbers of contracts before 1991-92, or their cost before 1990-91, is not readily available.

I hope this information is helpful.

Letter from Peter Joyce to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 16 May 1994:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your Question about contracts let by The Insolvency Service. Since The Insolvency Service became an Executive Agency in March 1990, eight contracts have been awarded to management consultants at a total cost of £0·33 million.

The Service also uses the private sector for advice on, development of and delivery in relation to specialist areas such as training, design and information technology systems.

Letter from R. D. Worswick to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 16 May 1994:

I have been asked to answer with respect to the Laboratory of the Government Chemist your question to the President of the Board of Trade concerning the cost and number of consultancy contracts let by the Executive Agencies of the Department of Trade and Industry.

Over the last five years (up to and including 1993-94) the Laboratory of the Government Chemist has let fourteen consultancy contracts at a total cost of £442,000.

Letter from W. Edgar to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 16 May 1994:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION NO. 29

"To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 24 March, Official Report, columns 428-9, how many consultancy contracts have been let by his Department's executive agencies in the last five years, and at what cost".

Over the past five years NEL has let 22 consultancy contracts at a total cost of £360,447.

You should note that the above consultancies were in respect of activities such as the development of commercial systems and investigation of new markets for NEL services.

Letter from P. B. Clapham to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 16 May 1994:

I am writing in response to your question to the President of the Board of Trade about the number and cost of consultancy contracts which have been let by his Department's Executive Agencies during the last five years.

The total number of external consultancies let by the National Physical Laboratory during the period was 82. The total cost was £1,472,325 excluding VAT.

I hope this provides the information need.

Letter from Seton Bennett to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 16 May 1994:

Parliamentary question: Consultancy contracts

I have been asked to reply, in respect of this Agency, to your recent question to the President of the Board of Trade concerning consultancy contracts let in the last five years.

The Number of consultancy contracts let by the National Weights and Measures Laboratory between April 1989 and March 1994 was 8, at a cost of £42,376.

Letter from P. R. S. Hartnack to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 16 May 1994:

I am replying in respect of the Patent Office to the question you tabled in Parliament on 29 April, regarding consultancy contracts let by DTI executive agencies over the last five years.

The Patent Office has been empowered to let contracts since it became an agency in March 1990. Since then, we have let five "general" or "management" consultancy contracts, at a cost of £10,100. Three of these involved advice on recruitment advertising or the establishment of training projects. Over this period we have also placed ten contracts for advice on building works and other property services (at a cost of £53,600) in connection with the seven sites from which we operate; and three contracts (£34,800) for legal and information technology advice: the Patent Office is very dependent upon its IT systems in order to perform its statutory duties.

I hope that this is helpful.

Letter from Jim Norton to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 16 May 1994:

I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question to the President of the Board of Trade about the number of consultancy contracts let by this Agency in the last five years; and at what cost.

The Radiocommunications Agency was created as an Executive Agency of the DTI in April 1990. Before that date all contracts were let through the DTI. The figures in the table below therefore relate only to the years from 1990-91. Details are given concerning all contracts let to external consultants. Some of these contracts span financial years with payments being made on a staged basis across the life of the contract.

Financial year	Number of contracts	[1]Value £ thousands
1990-91	10	471
1991-92	10	746
1992-93	14	1,058
1993-94	8	768

[1]Including VAT.

In addition, the Radiocommunications Agency funds academic institutions and other research bodies to carry out research into radio propagation as part of our research programme.

I hope this information is useful.

Letter from D. Cormack to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 16 May 1994:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION

PQ from Mr. Alan Milburn (Darlington):

To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his Answer of 24 March, Official Report, columns 428-9, how many consultancy contracts have been let by his Department's executive agencies in the last five years; and at what cost.

Warren Spring Laboratory Executive Agency has let no consultancy contracts in the last five years.

Market Overt

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the markets and locations coming within the ancient statute of market overt.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 13 May 1994]: By long-standing custom, every retail shop in the City of London is a market overt. Outside London, a market overt must be one established by charter or statute; the exact number is not known.

DEFENCE

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if spent fuel from nuclear submarine reactors will be processed in THORP.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has no plans to process spent fuel from nuclear submarine reactors in THORP.

HMS Valiant

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent on repairs to HMS Valiant during the last financial year; and what repairs to HMS Valiant will be undertaken following its arrival at Plymouth.

Mr. Aitken: Around £2·4 million was spent on repairs to HMS Valiant during the last financial year.

It is not our practice to comment on the nature of defects in nuclear-powered submarines.

Low Flying

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of total low flying activity took place over Wales for the last six months of 1993.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) on 16 February, Official Report, column 818.

PRIME MINISTER

Sir Robin Butler

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) of 28 April, Official Report, columns 254-55, if he will set out the criteria to be adopted to judge the disproportionate time or effort in preparing information as stated at paragraph (c) of the Cabinet Secretary's note to which he refers.

The Prime Minister: The criteria are set out in the guidance on interpretation of the code of practice on access to Government information, which has been issued to all Departments and placed in the Library of the House. The guidance states that consideration should be given to the amount of information sought in an application and the difficulties in identifying, locating or collating the information requested. The guidance goes on to say:

"In each case, the test is whether these factors would mean that meeting an access request would require an unreasonable diversion of resources or otherwise undermine the work of the department (because files are kept out of circulation for extended periods, for example, or staff have to be diverted a considerable amount of time from other more urgent work)."

Wrafton Laboratories, Devon

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions he has visited the north Devon factory of Wrafton laboratories since January 1993; and what was the date and purpose of each visit.

The Prime Minister: I have made one visit, on Friday 5 February 1993, as part of a series of regional visits throughout the country.

Consultants

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Prime Minister when he intends to publish the report of the Cabinet Office efficiency unit on the use of outside consultants to identify savings in the civil service.

The Prime Minister: The final report of the efficiency unit's scrutiny on the Government's use of external consultants will be completed shortly. It is the normal practice for the efficiency unit's reports to be published. A decision on publishing the report will be made when the final report has been received.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what information has been made available to Her Majesty's Government as a result of the opening of Stasi files in East Germany about the acquisition of timing devices of the type manufactured by Edwin Bollier and Ulrick Lumpert, which featured in the destruction of Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie and of the approach to Bollier and Lumpert by United States authorities on 30 December 1988.

The Prime Minister: The exchange of information with the German authorities in the Lockerbie investigation is a matter for my right honourable and learned Friend the Lord Advocate. He has repeatedly made clear that he cannot comment on details of the available evidence while criminal proceedings are pending.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

World Bank Documents

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to make those World bank documents which are available to American non-governmental organisations available to hon. Members.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Her Majesty's Government will continue to follow the procedure that has been agreed by all members of the World bank whereby documents are made available under the bank's policy on disclosure of information. A list of those documents is available to hon. Members in the House of Commons Library.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the incidence of cholera in Somalia; and what has been the international community's response.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As at 29 April, 12,444 cases, including 491 deaths, had been reported. The international community continues to respond within the framework set out in my answer of 27 April, columns 194-95.

Family Planning

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contributions are being made to the International Planned Parenthood Federation, the United Nations population fund and the World Health Organsiation human reproduction programme in 1994.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have made the following contributions to the core costs of the International Planned Parenthood Federation, the United Nations population fund and the World Health Organisation's progamme of research and training in human reproduction in 1994:

IPPF	7·5
UNFPA	7·0
WHO/HRP	2·5

Additional contributions for specific programme activities may also be made during the year.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan) of 19 January, Official Report, column 590, regarding United Kingdom bilateral disbursements on population activities, if he can now given the total figures for 1993.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Bilateral expenditure in 1993 on population activities, including HIV/AIDS and reproductive health and the joint funding scheme, has provisionally been estimated at £16·125 million. A final figure will be produced as soon as possible.

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what review he has conducted of the extent to which aid under the aid and trade provisions has been linked to arms sales and the implications of this for overseas aid policy.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I know of no case in which a project funded under the aid and trade provision has been conditionally linked to the sale of arms. As a matter of policy, the British Government would not countenance any such link.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Justice (Delays and Costs)

42. Mr. Steen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will set up a review to look at the delays in the administration of justice and the cost of obtaining it.

Mr. John M. Taylor: As well as continuing to evaluate and implement the outstanding recommendations of the civil justice review and the relevant recommendations of the Royal Commission on criminal justice, we have several other reviews in hand, including Lord Woolf's work on access to justice and the departmental fundamental review.

Police and Magistrates Courts Bill

44. Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received in the last month on the Police and Magistrates Courts Bill [Lords].

Mr. John M. Taylor: In the month since 17 April, the Lord Chancellor and I have received 45 representations from hon. Members and peers and 11 from magistrates and other members of the public.

Judges

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what discussions he has had with other Law Officers with a view to election of judges.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None.

Justices' Clerks

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department by how many magistrates courts committees, and for how many petty sessions areas, justices' clerks have been put on (a) fixed-term contracts and (b) performance-related pay; and how many, and what proportion of, justices' clerks and petty sessions areas are currently affected by (a) or (b) or both.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The terms and conditions of individual members of staff are a matter for magistrates courts committees as employers. The Department has no record of the numbers of justices' clerks who are either on fixed-term contracts or receiving performance-related pay.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Investments

34. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, who is responsible for deciding the overall balance of the Church Commissioners' investments; and what policy is currently being pursued.

Mr. Alison: The commissioners' assets committee is responsible for deciding the balance of the investment portfolio with general rules made by the board of governors. The commissioners' long-term aim is to achieve a diversified portfolio which bears comparison with those held by other institutions with similar responsibilities. This will mean a reduction, over a period, in the commissioners' property holdings, although, of course, this can be achieved only as market conditions allow.

Women Priests

35. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what is the number of women currently ordained into the priesthood of the Church of England for those stipends for which the Church Commissioners are responsible.

Mr. Alison: As at 8 May, there were 146 women priests receiving a stipend through the Church Commissioners' payroll.

London Offices

36. Mr. Lidington: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what is the annual cost to the commissioners of their office accommodation in London.

Mr. Alison: The commissioners own the freehold of No. 1 Millbank and the Church of England records centre at Galleywall road, Bermondsey. The cost of maintaining, heating and lighting the commissioners' office accommodation was £0·47 million in 1993.

Lambeth Report

37. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, if he will make a statement on the implementation of the recommendations contained in the Lambeth report.

Mr. Alison: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Staffordshire, South (Mr. Cormack) on 25 April, column 13.

Priests' Incomes

38. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what are the average fees, stipends or salaries paid to ordained (a) women and (b) men; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alison: Clergy remuneration is linked to the category of post, with no differentiation on the ground of gender. In 1993 the average stipend for clergy of incumbent status was £12,830. The equivalent figure for assistant staff was £12,140. Both figures take account of fee income, which was on average about £750 per head. Accommodation, free of rent, is provided.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Statistics

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list for the first 100 sitting days of sessions (1) 1990-91, (2) 1992-93 and (3) 1993-94, (i) the average hour of rising of the House, (ii) the number of divisions, (iii) the number of Public Bills (a) passed and (b) reported from Standing Committee, (iv) the number of affirmative statutory instruments (a) debated in Standing Committee and (b) debated on the Floor of the House, (v) the number of prayers against statutory instruments (a) debated in Standing Committee and (b) debated on the Floor of the House, (vi) the number of Opposition days and (vii) the number of Bills guillotined.

Mr. Newton: The information sought is contained in the following table.

Average hour or rising of the House	11.58 pm	11.27 pm	11.43 pm
Number of divisions	134	118	236
Public Bills passed	32	23	21
Bills reported from Standing Committee	37	11	17
Affirmative Statutory Instrument debated in Standing Committee	58	67	14
Prayers against Statutory Instruments debated in Standing Committee	10	6	1
Affirmative Statutory Instruments debated on floor of House	38	28	66
Prayers against Statutory Instruments debated on floor of House	12	0	1
Number of Opposition Days	9½	7½	11
Number of Bills guillotined	1	2	4

Private Members' Bills

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Lord President of the Council on how many and which occasions in the current Session Government Departments or Parliamentary counsel have drafted amendments for the use of Government Back Benchers in the Report stage of private Members' Bills.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Rochdale (Mrs. Maddock) on 13 May, Official Report, column 259.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee how many right hon. and hon. Members have not obtained a photo-identity pass for the House of Commons.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

ANZAC Memorial

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if he will consider relocating the ANZAC memorial, at present situated in the passage between the florist and the Strangers' Bar, to a more fitting location.

Mr. Ray Powell: I have referred the hon. Member's suggestion to the Advisory Committee on Works of Art.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Mobile Telephones and Pagers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many (a) portable telephones, (b) pagers and electronic bleepers and (c) car telephones are currently used by his Department; what are the annual costs of operating this equipment; and to which personnel it is made available.

Mr. Tony Newton: The answer to the first part of the hon. Member's question is five, none and two respectively. The operating cost of this equipment, which is used only by Ministers and their private secretaries, was £5,530 in 1993-94.

EDUCATION

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) whether the Funding Agency for Schools will continue to share responsibility with local education authorities in those areas where over 10 per cent. of schools have opted out but where local government reorganisation reduces the numbers of opted-out schools to below 10 per cent;

(2) whether the Funding Agency for Schools will continue to have responsibility for the provision of school places in local authority areas where over 75 per cent. of schools have currently opted out but where local government reorganisation reduces the number of opted-out schools to below 75 per cent.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend would need to consider this matter in the light of the individual circumstances applying in any new LEA areas.

Outdoor Activity Centres

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about the contribution made by the Sports Council in drawing up the "Guidance for Safety in Outdoor Activity Centres".

Mr. Forth: The Sports Council was represented on the steering group which the Department established to help prepare guidance on safety in outdoor activity centres. The draft circular which the Department prepared in the light of the steering group's advice was issued on 13 May; a copy is in the Library.

TASC Unit

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the budget of the Teaching as a Career unit for each year of its existence in relation to its English functions.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Teaching as a Career unit was set up in 1987 to serve both England and Wales. The table shows the annual expenditure for running costs and publicity. The Welsh Office contributes one eighteenth of the running costs of the unit, but has a separate budget for Welsh-only advertising and publications.

Annual expenditure of the Teaching as a Career Unit

Year	Running costs (England and Wales)	Publicity
1987-88	345,611	166,988
1988-89	375,000	558,999
1989-90	400,000	553,853
1990-91	698,928	788,284
1991-92	954,139	647,500
1992-93	818,000	588,000
1993-94	751,500	312,020
1994-95 (planned)	844,000	350,000

Teacher Training

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what were the budgets subvented to the Higher Education Funding Council for England in respect of teacher training in England in each year of its existence.

Mr. Boswell: The Department has not earmarked amounts for teacher training within the annual grants to the Higher Education Funding Council for England. We shall determine in due course the amount to be allocated to the Teacher Training Agency for the funding responsibilities which will be transferred to it in 1995-96, subject to the passage of the Education Bill.

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what budget is proposed annually for the Teacher Training Agency in England; and what is its breakdown.

Mr. Robin Squire: We shall determine in due course the annual budget of the Teacher Training Agency, reflecting the funding and other responsibilities which will transfer to it in 1995-96, subject to the passage of the Education Bill.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ministerial Visits

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when each of the present Ministers in the Northern Ireland Office was appointed; and on how many nights each month since their appointment they have remained overnight in Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested is provided in the table.

Emergency Provisions Act

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects Mr. John Rowe's report on the operation in 1993 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991 to be available.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have today arranged for copies of Mr. John Rowe's report to be placed in the Library of the House. I welcome this independent report which will serve as a basis for Parliament to debate the annual renewal of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991.

I am most grateful to Mr. Rowe for his work in carrying out his review of the operation of the Act in 1993. His report will receive careful and detailed consideration.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many parliamentary questions to his Department have not been answered because of disproportionate costs or because the information requested was not held centrally over the last five years; how many could be answered now due to computerisation and/or more effective operational systems; and if he will list each such question along with the name and constituency of the hon. Member who tabled it.

Sir John Wheeler: The number of answers given to parliamentary questions from 1990 to April 1994 recorded in the POLIS database as including a reference to part or all of the information not being held centrally or being available only at disproportionate cost was 187. As a result of computerisation and/or more effective operational systems more detailed information is now available in respect of 19 questions which are listed. However, in some cases the full information would still not be available.

Dr. Joe Hendron (Belfast West): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how the average waiting time for those people waiting for their first appointment with a cardiac surgeon has increased or decreased during the last 12 months.

Mr. William O'Brien (Normanton): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total expenditure, including legal costs and compensation payments, incurred by each health and social services board in defending religion and sex discrimination cases over the past three years to 30 April.

Mr. Martin Redmond (Don Valley): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the number of patients waiting for out-patient treatment on 31 March for each individual health authority (a) in total and (b) by main speciality for periods (i) under 12 months; (ii) 12 to 24 months and (iii) over 24 months.

Mr. Seamus Mallon (Newry and Armagh): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many deaf people in Northern Ireland, are in receipt of * Attendance Allowance in each age bracket (a) under 10 years, (b) 10 to 18 years, (c) 18 to 65 years and (d) over 65 years.

(*The question would now refer to Disability Living Allowance and not Attendance Allowance as in the original question.)

Mr. William Ross (East Londonderry): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show the current length of waiting lists at each acute hospital in Northern Ireland; and what are the comparable figures in each of the last 5 years.

Mr. John Hume (Foyle): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate the number of hip replacement operations which were done privately in each of the last 3 years in National Health Service hospitals.

Mr. Seamus Mallon (Newry and Armagh): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals: (a) over 65 years, (b) physically disabled and (c) mentally disabled were receiving hospital, residential or nursing home care in each year since 1985 in each health board area in Northern Ireland.

Rev. Martin Smyth (Belfast, South): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list, for each health and social services board, the number of (a) administrative and clerical staff, by grade and (b) managerial staff by grade since 1989.

Mr. John Hume (Foyle): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total take-up of student loans to date in Northern Ireland by (a) institution and (b) area board expressed as a percentage of the estimated number of eligible students, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. William Ross (East Londonderry): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in official report those firms and employers which are registered with the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Commission for each District Council in the County of Tyrone: and if he will indicate for each such firm and employer the number of employees.

Mr. William Ross (East Londonderry): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the official report those firms and employers which are registered with the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Commission for each District Council in the County of Fermanagh; and if he will indicate for each such firm and employer the number of employees.

Mr. William Ross (East Londonderry): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the official report those firms and employers which are registered with the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Commission for each District Council in the County Londonderry; and if he will indicate for each such firm and employer the number of employees.

Mr. William Ross (East Londonderry): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the official report those firms and employers which are registered with the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Commission for each District Council in the County Down; and if he will indicate for each such firm and employer the number of employees.

Mr. William Ross (East Londonderry): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the official report those firms and employers which are registered with the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Commission for each District Council in the County Antrim; and if he will indicate for each such firm and employer the number of employees.

Mr. William Ross (East Londonderry): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the official report those firms and employers which are registered with the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Commission for each District Council in the County Armagh; and if he will indicate for each such firm and employer the number of employees.

Rev. Ian Paisley (Antrim North): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, how much money has been expended in the Ballymoney Borough Council area out of the various EEC funds.

Rev. Ian Paisley (Antrim North): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been expended in the Moyle Council area out of the various EEC funds.

Rev. Ian Paisley (Antrim North): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been expended in the Ballymena Borough Council area out of the various EEC funds.

Dr. Marek (Wrexham): To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total cost so far of the market-testing initiative in his Department since November 1991.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chechen Republic

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communications he has had from the Chechen Republic in Russia about the state of relationships with Britain, the reasons for changes and any consequent actions by the Chechen Republic.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no direct relations with the Chechen Republic of the Russian Federation, nor have we received any communication from it recently. However, I understand that it issued a public statement on 5 May denying Chechen involvement in the murder of Karen Reed and suspending links with Britain.

Kuwait

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the contemporary environmental conditions in Kuwait in the aftermath of the Gulf war; and what continuing involvement there is by British companies and agencies in the alleviation of those conditions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The clean-up operations in Kuwait following the Gulf war are almost complete. There was a high degree of British participation in tackling the immediate environmental consequences, both bilaterally and through the United Nations Environmental Programme. By the end of 1991, all the oil fires were extinguished and no floating oil remained at sea.

In 1992, the United States ship Mount Mitchell conducted a research cruise on the extent of contamination in the Persian gulf. Since then, we have made no recent assessment of the environmental conditions in Kuwait, although scientific research into the long-term effects of the oil fires continues. The Regional Organisation for the Protection of the Marine Environment makes regionally based assessments. Meanwhile, Royal Ordnance plc continues to conduct minefield clearance operations in Kuwait.

Yemen

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of whether all British nationals who should have been evacuated from Yemen have now left the country safely.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All British nationals who made it known to our embassy in Sana'a that they wished to leave the Yemen have been evacuated. Some have elected to remain.

Iraq

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the meeting in Riyadh between the Gulf Co-operation Council and the European Union concerning Iraq and Bosnia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We welcome the statement following the ministerial meeting between the EC and GCC Foreign Ministers in Riyadh on 8 May. Ministers condemned Iraq for its failure to implement Security Council resolutions in full and its policy of selectivity in implementing such resolutions. They also expressed their concern at the continued repression of the civilian population by the Iraqi regime.

On Bosnia, both sides welcomed the Washington agreement on a Bosniac/Croat federation, and expressed full support for the efforts of the international community to reach a negotiated settlement in the basis of the EU action plan, and underlined the need for their countries to contribute to the political and economic reconstruction of the former Yugoslavia after a settlement. The GCC Ministers separately called for the lifting of the arms embargo for the Bosnian Government.

East Timor

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what pressure he has put on the Indonesian Government to allow Amnesty International access to East Timor.

Mr. Goodlad: The Indonesian Foreign Minister confirmed to me when I was in Jakarta last month that he would consider inviting Amnesty International to visit Indonesia to discuss East Timor.

Bosnia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made directly, or through NATO or the European Union, to the Bosnian Government concerning the shelling of Brcko and military activity around the town; what action he has proposed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs sent messages to both President Izetbegovic and Dr. Karadzic on 27 April urging restraint, especially in the Brcko area. The Security Council on 4 May agreed a presidential statement to similar effect. We deplore the loss of innocent life whoever is responsible. The United Nations and NATO continue to monitor the situation closely.

HEALTH

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 20 April, Official Report, column 541, regarding trusts which failed to meet the capital return targets, when the information for 1993-94 will be made available.

Mr. Sackville: This information will be available once accounts have been audited and submitted to the national health service executive in December 1994.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the size of surpluses generated by trusts in each year since 1990-91, by region.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is shown in the table. There were no operational trusts in the 1990-91 financial year. Information for 1993-94 will be available in December 1994.

Region	Retained surplus/(deficit)
	1991-92 £000s	1992-93 £000s
Northern	2,896	5,427
Yorkshire	3,100	2,991
Trent	153	4,593
East Anglian	1,075	533
North West Thames	6,145	17,220
North East Thames	7,249	13,165
South East Thames	1,082	9,597
South West Thames	6,582	4,116
Wessex	2,111	4,105
South Western	12,483	11,119
Oxford	104	4,356
West Midlands	2,932	4,177
Mersey	2,194	(749)
North Western	50	6,952

Notes:

1. Source: Audited accounts of NHS Trusts 1991-92 and 1992-93.
2. The figures for 1992-93 are provisional, being subject to National Audit Office review.
3. Surplus/(Deficit) is after interest, dividend payable on Public Dividend Capital, extraordinary and exceptional items.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will itemise where trusts deposited their surpluses in each year since 1990-91.

Mr. Sackville: It is for trusts to make their own arrangements for depositing cash not required for immediate use, within the constraints placed on them by statute. Information on where individual trusts deposit their money is not available centrally, but such arrangements as they do make are subject to independent audit. Paragraph 7 of schedule 3 to the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 states that trusts can invest surplus cash in securities of the Government of the United Kingdom or in such other manner as the Secretary of State may, with the consent of the Treasury, approve. Approval has been given for investment in certain United Kingdom public sector institutions, banks which are authorised institutions under part I of the Banking Act 1987, and building societies authorised under the Building Societies Act 1986.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many speech therapists expressed in whole-time equivalents are employed in Wandsworth district health authority; and what is the percentage in post against funded establishment.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Batley and Spen (Mrs. Peacock) on 14 January at columns 317-20.

Cosmetic Surgery

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what safeguards are in place to prevent the carrying out in the United Kingdom of liposuction operations by surgeons whose EC practice certificate has been withdrawn.

Mr. Sackville: Practitioners are required to register annually with the General Medical Council, which will also keep a record on a specialist list of any certificate issued in compliance with EC directive 94/16/EEC (Specialist Medical Training).

As the United Kingdom competent authority for registration of medical practitioners, the General Medical Council is also responsible for the recording of details of specialist certification from members of the EC who enter this country to practise.

The registration details of surgeons offering plastic surgery are available, to patients seeking liposuction treatment, through their general practitioner, who will have access to the latest details carried in the General Medical Council's registers.

Audiology

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of how many of the London hospital audiology departments have a sufficient staff ratio to meet the needs of the served population and of the adequacy of funding available to the London hospital audiology departments to meet the needs of the served population; how much it is costing London hospital audiology departments to use agency staff rather than permanent staff; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 15 February at column 666. Local health authorities are responsible for purchasing audiology services to meet the needs of their populations. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairmen of the London health authorities for details on the level of service that they purchase and to the chairmen of trusts about the costs of agency staff.

Paediatric Care, Hastings and Rye

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements will be available for comprehensive tertiary paediatric care for children from Hastings and Rye in the South Thames region.

Mr. Sackville: Children from Hastings and Rye are first referred to the Conquest hospital for immediate identification of the problem. East Sussex health authority purchases specialist tertiary care in one or two cases per year from Guy's and St. Thomas's national health service trust.

DDT

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will undertake a survey of all former armed forces personnel in order to identify possible medical conditions arising from the use of DDT during service.

Mr. Sackville: No. Surveys of people allegedly affected by events during their employment would not normally be undertaken by the Department. We are not aware of any reports of medical conditions in former armed forces personnel arising from the use of DDT during service. On the known toxicity of the pesticide, none would be expected in normal use.

General Practitioners and Pharmacies (Regulation)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how she regulates the qualifications and service training of laboratory staff carrying out tests for cholesterol and glucose in general practitioners' surgeries and high-street pharmacies.

Mr. Sackville: There is no requirement for staff carrying out tests for cholesterol and glucose in general practitioner surgeries and pharmacies to be regulated. Self-testing diagnostics are available for both of these tests and quite often the same products are used in GP surgeries and pharmacies.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether GP fundholders and pharmacies carrying out personal scientific medical investigations are required to be licensed and participate in external anonymous quality control procedures; to what extent they are subject to inspection; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: General practitioners and pharmacies are not required by law to be licensed, participate in external quality control procedures or be subject to inspection. Many GPs participate in voluntary professional schemes and pharmacies are subject to the terms of a professional code covering these issues.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures are available to deal with local pharmacies which provide prescription drugs to patients which are dispensed beyond their "use by" date; and what checks are made to ensure the quality of prescription materials.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain's inspectors include expiry date checking as part of their regular monitoring of professional activities in pharmacies. Any breach of the rules could result in prosecution under section 64 of the Medicines Act and/or reference to the Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain's Statutory Committee. The drug testing scheme administered by family health services authorities provides an independent check on the quality of drugs and appliances dispensed.

Child Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has available on the proportion of social services department budgets in each English local authority devoted to child care and associated services; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Information provided by local authorities for 1993-94 is shown in the table.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to ensure that housing needs identified under the provisions of the Children Act 1989 are being met by local authorities; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Under the Children Act 1989, local authorities have a duty, in prescribed circumstances, to provide accommodation for children and young people.

Statistics

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of (a) pregnancy, (b) NHS abortion, (c) venereal disease and (d) AIDS, were identified in persons aged (i) under 16 years, (ii) 16 to 18 years, (iii) 18 to 25 years and (iv) over 25 years, in the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The information will be placed in the Library.

Child Fatalities

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to introduce a system to identify death through neglect in child fatality cases.

Mr. Bowis: Information on cause of death is available from the existing system of death registration, using the international classification of diseases, which already identifies neglect under the following categories; criminal neglect, abandonment or neglect of helpless persons, lack of food or water, exposure and destitution.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many persons diagnosed as suffering from Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease have previously been blood donors.

Mr. Sackville: Of 156 cases reported to the national Creutzfeldt Jakob disease surveillance centre unit since 1 May 1990, 22 are believed to have given blood at some stage in their lives. There is no epidemiological evidence of any risk of transmission of Creutzfeldt Jakob disease through blood or blood products. However, individuals with central nervous system diseases or risk factors for Creutzfeldt Jakob disease are now excluded from blood donation.

Bed Shortages

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health with whom the obligation of payment rests when a patient is discharged from hospital because of a lack of long-stay beds and is still in need of continuing care in a private nursing home.

Mr. Bowis: Under the new community care arrangements health and local authorities have been required to agree their respective responsibilities for long-term care and procedures governing hospital discharge.

Drug Abuse, Hampshire

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the expenditure by her Department in the last year for which figures are available for (a) drug rehabilitation and (b) health education in relation to drug abuse; and what proportion of that funding was spent in Hampshire.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities were allocated £20·043 million in 1992-93—towards the costs of developing services for drug misusers. The Wessex regional health authority "AIDS (Control) Act" Report for that year shows expenditure of £1·437 million, of which £665,014 is recorded for Southampton, Portsmouth, Basingstoke and Winchester district health authorities. Copies of the "AIDS (Control) Act" report are available in the Library.

The specific grant for alcohol and drug misuse services was £2·3 million in 1993-94, of which £42,841 was awarded to four schemes for drug misusers in Hampshire.

Section 64 grants to support the work of the voluntary sector nationally in the drugs field in 1993-94 totalled £788,970. A further £92,803 was paid in 1993-94 to voluntary agencies and other organisations concerned with services for drug addicts.

The Department spent £5·47 million in 1993-94 on national anti-drug and solvent misuse publicity campaigns.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of deaths in Hampshire that were drug related for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Bowis: The number of deaths due to drug dependence and non-dependent abuse of drugs, excluding alcohol and tobacco, in Hampshire in 1992 was 10.

In addition there were 56 deaths due to poisoning by drugs, medicaments and biological substances.

Disabled People

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy that disabled facilities grants be made available in respect of disabled people under the age of 18 years.

Mr. Sackville: Disabled facilities grants are already available to disabled people under 18 years of age, under the Children Act 1989. These grants are one of a series of house renovation grants arising from the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, which was amended by the Children Act (Consequential Amendment of Enactments) Order 1991, so that children with disabilities are also eligible.

Patient Numbering System

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on progress in introducing the new patient numbering system for the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: The national health service number replacement programme is currently on schedule to deliver a new national health service number to England and Wales in 1996.

NHS Trusts, Sheffield

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each NHS trust within the Sheffield district health authority area, those chairmen and non-executive directors who live (a) within and (b) outside the Sheffield district health authority boundary.

Dr. Mawhinney: All chairman and non-executive directors appointed to national health service trusts within the area covered by Sheffield district health authority live within the authority's boundaries, with the following exceptions.

Northern general hospital NHS trust
Non-executive director
Professor F. Sharp

Central Sheffield University hospitals NHS trust
Non-executive director
Dr. I Rennie

Sheffield children's hospital NHS trust
Non-executive director
Mr. R. Pickford
Professor M. Tanner

TRANSPORT

Maritime Safety

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to consult trade unions when seeking to move staff employed by the Marine Safety Agency-designate in Southampton to alternative posts elsewhere.

Mr. Norris: The Marine Safety Agency has no plans to move staff employed in Southampton to alternative posts elsewhere.

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects Lord Donaldson to publish his report on maritime safety.

Mr. MacGregor: We intend to publish his report tomorrow at 2.30 pm; copies will be placed in the Vote Office on publication.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents involving (a) maritime transport sinking or (b) collisions have occurred in the Irish sea and the English channel during the last five years.

Mr. Norris: The figures given in the table relate to incidents involving one or more United Kingdom-registered merchant or fishing vessels where it has been established that the accident happened in either the Irish sea or the English channel.

The figures only are given for the years shown as information relating to a particular sea area and type of accident can only readily be obtained from the Marine Accident Investigation Branch computerised accident database. The database contains data from 1991 onwards only. To obtain the information requested for 1989 and 1990 would entail a great deal of research of the manual records for those years.

Driving Licences

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring forward proposals for driving licences to contain photographs and fingerprints.

Mr. Key: We will shortly start public consultation on our proposals to incorporate photographs on driving licences. We have no intention to include fingerprints.

Crossrail

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much public money has so far been spent on the Crossrail project.

Mr. Norris: I understand from London Underground Ltd. and British Rail that they have so far spent around £110 million on the Crossrail project.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the number and percentage of occasions annually on which the final approach separations used when there is no additional wake vortex separation requirement for (a) Leeds-Bradford and (b) Humberside airports are less than the legal minima; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: I have not made an assessment. I understand that there are standard procedures for reduced separation in the vicinity of an aerodrome which permit the distance between aircraft following one another to be reduced below the minimum radar separation by instead using visual separation. Visual separation may be used when the air traffic controller can see both the leading and following aircraft; or when the pilot of the following aircraft can view the preceding aircraft and maintain a safe distance. Visual separations are used whenever weather conditions permit. Controllers constantly monitor separations and take immediate action if distances between aircraft are below safe limits.

Market Testing

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the cost of the work associated with the market testing of shipping and seamen, with particular reference to the cost of consultants engaged and the cost of preparing the in-house bid.

Mr. Norris: The market testing of the registry of shipping and seamen involved expenditure of £19,100, excluding VAT, on consultants to support the in-house bid team. Consultants were not used to support the client side. Other costs associated with the market test were absorbed within the normal running costs of the registry of shipping and seamen and are not readily available.

Carlisle Airport

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the value of the contract between BNFL and Carlisle city council for the use of Carlisle airport.

Mr. Norris: This is a commercial matter between British Nuclear Fuels plc and Carlisle city council.

Research

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out for each year since 1979 the amount of money allocated for transport research by his Department to (a) the Transport Research Laboratory and (b) to outside consultants.

Mr. Key: The Department's research expenditure is reported in an annual publication by the Cabinet Office. Until this year, the "Annual Review of Government Funded R&D" included the Department's expenditure under a number of categories—intramural, to other Government Departments, private industry, etc. From this year the "Annual Review of Government Funded R&D" has been replaced by the "Forward Look". The "intramural" element shown in both publications very largely reflects the value of work carried out by the Transport Research Laboratory each year.

With the introduction of full economic costing, research commissioned from the Transport Research Laboratory has been costed on a revised basis since 1992-93.

The first Forward Look was published on 27 April and copies of this, and the previous publications, are available in the House of Commons Library.

Traffic Area Offices

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what guidance is given to members of the public in the draft traffic area office codes of practice for complaining about (a) illegally parked vehicles and (b) unsuitable vehicle operating centres;

(2) if he will list the advice given in the draft traffic area office codes of practice to members of the public on complaining about the operation of local bus services;

(3) if he will list how many paragraphs of information in the draft codes of practice, issued by the traffic area offices, are applicable to members of the public who are not goods or public service vehicle operators who wish to complain about the holder of an operator's licence;

(4) if he will list the advice given to members of the public about making complaints about unlicensed vehicle operators, in the draft traffic area office codes of practice.

Mr. Key: The code of practice for the traffic area offices sets out the standards of service which TAOs aim to meet in administering the operator licensing local bus registration systems. It indicates where complaints can be made if these service standards are not met. The code is not concerned with the actions of operators. Complaints about the illegal operation of heavy goods vehicles or the unsuitability of HGV operating centres can be addressed to the local traffic commissioner.

Complaints about local bus services should normally be made to the operator in the first instance. The Confederation of Passenger Transport United Kingdom, formerly the Bus and Coach Council, with our support, has issued a quality code for operators of local bus services, under which operators are encouraged to direct complaints to the relevant person, which would include, where appropriate, the traffic commissioner.

Railtrack

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if Railtrack has received its safety validation.

Mr. Freeman: Yes.

London Transport (Assaults)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 10 May, what was the ethnic origin of each of the employees of London Transport who experienced an assault while on duty (a) for London Buses and (b) for London Underground, in each of the past five years and in the current year to the latest available date.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 13 May 1994]: I regret that the information requested can be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will list the operational costs on a district basis of the Vehicle Inspectorate and the numbers of people employed within each district on (a) vehicle testing and (b) road transport enforcement, prior to the organisational changes within the Vehicle Inspectorate of 1 November 1993.

Mr. Key: I have asked the Vehicle Inspectorate chief executive to write to the hon. Member with this detailed information.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 23 February 1994:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent questions about the Vehicle Inspectorate. In all you asked five questions. One of these related to the future status of VI's testing stations and will be answered by Mr. Key.

The information relating to the remaining four questions is attached as follows:

Annex 1: VI testing stations by region following the Inspectorate's reorganisation on 1 November 1993.
Annex 2: Staffing and costs by district prior to 1 November 1993 (staffing expressed in whole time equivalents).
Annex 3: Current test fees.
Annex 4: Staffing by Vehicle Testing (VT) and Road Traffic Enforcement (RTE) regions.

2. Operational costs are those quoted on the October district/sector unit cost analysis.
3. On 1 November 1993 VI split its operational work between two dimensions: Vehicle Testing (VT) and Road Transport Enforcement (RTE). VT created a new regional structure based on 14 Regions. RTE reorganised into 23 areas integrating traffic and roadworthiness enforcement work.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many awards of criminal injuries compensation were made, resulting from (a) physical abuse, (b) sexual abuse and (c) neglect cases involving children, in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Maclean: The Criminal Injuries Compensation Board does not record centrally information about awards made in respect of abuse, neglect or other categories of injury.

However, since 1989, it has recorded information about the number of applications received in respect of children—under the age of 18 at the date of the incident—who have suffered abuse. The information summarised below is taken from CICB's annual reports, copies of which are held in the Library.

	1992-93	1991-92	1990-91	1989-90
All cases (including those of a non-sexual nature)	7,211	6,822	5,571	4,825
All sexual assaults	3,200	2,881	1,812	1,318
Sexual abuse within the family or by a relative	1,700	1,661	1,011	802

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many awards of criminal injuries compensation were made in each year since 1979; and what was the value of payments in each year.

Mr. Maclean: The information is taken from the annual reports of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, copies of which are held in the Library of the House. It is also summarised at annex A of the White Paper "Compensating victims of violent crime: Changes to the criminal injuries compensation scheme" (Cm 2434) published on 15 December 1993.

Financial year	Number of awards	Compensation paid (£m)
1979-80	17,460	15·7
1980-81	20,784	21·5

Fire Deaths

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons died in fires in each year since 1979, where the fire was located in (a) domestic dwellings, (b) industrial installations, (c) private residential homes, (d) offices, (e) recreational venues, (f) high-rise flats and (g) public houses, clubs and discotheques.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information is given in the table.

Number of deaths from fires attended by local authority fire brigades in the specified locations in the United Kingdom, 1979-92[1]

Year	Dwellings[2]	Industrial premises	Elderly persons' and children's homes[3]	Offices[4]	Recreational venues	Public houses, clubs[5]

Trespass

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to strengthen protection for private landowners against trespass by hunts and to provide remedies for trespass on public footpaths.

Mr. Maclean: The proposed new offence of aggravated trespass, contained in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill, will apply to all trespassers, including hunters, who wilfully disrupt, or seek to disrupt, a lawful activity on land. It will be possible to commit the new offence on footpaths and bridleways.

Immigration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department further to his oral statement of 4 May, Official Report, columns 823-26, which organisations and individuals have so far been consulted on possible changes to the immigration rules in 1994; and what form the consultation has taken.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In July 1993, copies of a working draft of the revised immigration rules were sent to the following organisations:

Bar Council
Camden Law Centre
Commission for Racial Equality
Immigration Advisory Service
Immigration Law Practitioners' Association (ILPA)
Joint Council for the Welfare of Immigrants (JCWI)
Law Centres Federation
Law Society
National Association of Citizens' Advice Bureaux
Refugee Legal Centre

Copies of the working draft were placed in the Vote Office and Library of the House. They were also made available, on request, to a number of legal practitioners and others. Officials held meetings in December with representatives of ILPA, JCWI and the Law Society to discuss their written responses to the working draft.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department further to his oral statement of 4 May, Official Report, columns 823-26, what are the compelling and compassionate circumstances in which it may allow an application from a homosexual non-United Kingdom citizen for leave to remain in the United Kingdom with a homosexual partner who is a United Kingdom citizen.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Factors which may be taken into account in assessing whether compelling compassionate circumstances are present in such an application are the health of the settled partner and the length and stability of the relationship.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for leave to remain in the United Kingdom made by non-United Kingdom citizens on the basis of a same-sex relationship with a citizen of the United Kingdom have been (a) accepted and (b) rejected since 1990.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not separately identified in the statistics.

Drug Abuse, Hampshire

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimate of the cost of drug-related crime in Hampshire for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean: The involvement of drug misusers in criminal activity is difficult to quantify. It is not possible to estimate with any accuracy the amount of crime which is drug related.

Refugees

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is meant by exceptional leave to enter for persons applying for refugee status.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A person who is not recognised as a refugee in the United Kingdom in accordance with the 1951 United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees may be granted exceptional leave to enter or remain if there are compelling humanitarian reasons for not returning him to his country of origin.

Operation Elgar

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people were detained following operation Elgar; how many have subsequently been released; how many are still detained; and how many of those detained were employed by the London borough of Southwark;

(2) if he will make a statement on operation Elgar which took place on 27 April;

(3) how many people have been deported following operation Elgar.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Operation Elgar was a joint operation by the Immigration Service and the Metropolitan police aimed at detecting offenders against the immigration laws.

As a result of visits conducted on 27 April, 59 people were detained. Two more were detained following related visits on 28 April and 1 May. Of these 61, 11 have been removed from the United Kingdom as illegal entrants or under the deportation process, and two remain in detention with a view to removal. The remaining 48 were released and 22 of them are subject to reporting restrictions pending removal from the United Kingdom on further consideration of their cases. A total of 44 people were dealt with as offenders against the immigration laws.

Twenty-four of the people detained and dealt with as immigration offenders were identified as being on the payroll of the London borough of Southwark. It is not known how many were employed by the borough at the time of the operation.

The operation was carefully planned and the guidance in Home Office circular 131/1980 about the conduct of operations of this type was fully observed.

Identity Cards

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated cost of supplying every adult with an identity card.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Warley, West (Mr. Spellar) on 7 December 1993, column 168.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make a study of the new identity card system to be introduced in the Netherlands in June.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have no plans for a specific study of the system in the Netherlands.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his Department has had with other member states of the European Union regarding mutual recognition of identity cards; and what discussions his Department has had regarding a common European-wide identity card.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have had no discussions with other European Union member states about identity cards. Community law already provides that nationals of any European Economic Area state may use a valid identity card issued by that state for travel throughout the European Economic Area. It is a matter for each member state to decide whether or not to issue identity cards.

Life Sentence Prisoners

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements he proposes to introduce for interviewing life sentence prisoners for release on licence following the abolition of local review committees in September 1994.

Mr. Howard: I have asked the Parole Board to undertake the interviewing of life sentence prisoners currently performed by local review committees. This will include mandatory life sentence prisoners and discretionary life sentence prisoners whose tariffs have not yet expired. I am most grateful to the board for agreeing to take on this extra work.

I would also like to express my sincere thanks to all present and former members of local review committees for their outstanding contribution to the parole scheme over the last 25 years. They have given most generously of their time and I am very grateful to them for their hard work, dedication and the great care they have taken over their recommendations in this very sensitive area.

Public Alert System

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan) of 28 February, Official Report, column 586, on studies of possible enhancements to the national public alert system, if he will give (a) the terms of reference of the studies, (b) the personnel carrying out the studies, (c) the expected cost of the studies, (d) the date on which they commenced and (e) the date on which the studies are expected to be completed; and if he will publish the report of the studies.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The requirements of the study now being considered were:

"To review current receipt and generation arrangements using only peacetime Broadcasting Systems for alerting/warning the public and to produce a proposal for a National Warning System using existing peacetime Broadcasting Networks as a primary system for warning the United Kingdom population of an air attack."

The study was carried out by the BBC at a cost of £4,200 and was presented in October last year. It is being examined by officials in the course of their normal duties. The study contains information confidential to the BBC's operations and it would not be appropriate for my Department to publish it. The need for and scope and timing of further studies have not yet been decided.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan) of 28 February, Official Report, column 586, if he will place in the Library a copy of the representations by his officials to the Local Government Commission for England on the subject of emergency planning.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A copy of the letter referred to in my reply to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan), column 586, has been placed in the Library.

European Union (Ministerial Meetings)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the formal meetings at which representatives of the United Kingdom Government have attended in accordance with article K3 of the European Union treaty since the coming into force of that treaty together with the subject matter under consideration at the meeting and the title U1 of the official representing the United Kingdom Government.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not routinely collected centrally and could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Police Complement

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many supernumerary officers there are in each police authority and how many of them are on royal protection duties.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is not our practice to publish details of police deployment to protection duties, for security reasons.

Police Sick Leave

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by sex, and by year for the last 10 years, the average number of police officer days lost for reasons of sickness in each police authority.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is not available in the form which is requested. Information is available on the average number of days which were lost due to sickness for the years 1990 to 1993 and is shown in the table.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of people remanded in custody by magistrates courts in (a) Doncaster, (b) Barnsley, (c) Rotherham and (d) Sheffield in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 16 May 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking what was the total number of people remanded in custody by magistrates' courts in (a) Doncaster, (b) Sheffield in each of the last five years.

The information you have requested relating to the numbers received into a Prison Service establishment on remand from the Magistrates' courts requested is given in the attached table.

Receptions into a Prison Service establishment in England and Wales on Remand from a Magistrates' court in Doncaster, Barnsley, Rotherham or Sheffield, 1989—1993

Obscene Publications Branch

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations have been made to him in relation to the future of the obscene publications branch at New Scotland Yard.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have received 26 letters and three questions, apart from this one, from hon. and right hon. Members about this matter, and one other letter from a voluntary organisation. The future of the obscene publications branch was also the subject of a recent early-day motion, No. 1057.

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Director General of the Prison Service as to the number of drug finds that have been made in prisons in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of drug finds is one aspect of the drugs problem in prisons, but it is not a reliable indicator of its scale. My right hon. and learned Friend has had frequent discussions about that problem with the Director General and others and the methods of dealing with it.

Prison Population, South Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by Her Majesty's prison and remand home/centre, for the latest date he has figures available, the number of inmates whose place of residence is South Yorkshire; and what were the figures (a) 12 and (b) 24 months ago.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 16 May 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking if he will list by Her Majesty's prison and remand home/centre for the latest date he has figures available, the number of inmates whose place of residence is South Yorkshire; and what were the figures (a) 12 and (b) 24 months ago.

The information available on where prisoners originate from is for the county of the court first committing to custody. The latest available provisional statistics are for the population in Prison Service establishments on 31 December 1993, who were first committed to custody by a court from South Yorkshire, and is given in the attached table.

I regret to inform you that the information on the population available before 1993 is unreliable because of the high proportion of sentenced cases with no court data recorded.

National Lottery Charities Board

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will name the members of the National Lottery Charities Board;

(2) when the National Lottery Charities Board will be set up.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 10 May that he was appointing as chairman of the National Lottery Charities Board the hon. David Sieff. Potential board members are currently under consideration, and he expects to make appointments within the next few weeks.

Ethnic Minorities

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give consideration to protecting educational and social welfare projects which have received section 11 grant since 1992 and which fall outside bidding guidance issued for the single regeneration budget.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No guarantee can be given as regards the future of existing projects beyond existing commitments but the bidding guidance already covers activity of this sort. The specific aims of the budget include initiatives intended to "enhance the employment prospects, education and skills of local people, particularly the young and those at a disadvantage, and promote equality of opportunity" and to

"promote initiatives of benefit to ethnic minorities".

Privatisation (Consultants)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the cost of employing consultants in connection with privatisation programmes in which his Department has been engaged since 1980.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 4 May 1994]: The information is as follows:

Sale of NTL (October 1991)	2,152,000
Sale of DTELS (March 1994)[1]	822,000

[1] These are costs so far calculated. The final account has yet to be settled.

These figures exclude payments to the Government Actuary's Department.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Physical Education Teachers

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what guidance his Department has given the Sports Council on the development of pre-service and in-service training for physical education teachers.

Mr. Sproat: My Department is represented on the Sports Council's young people and sport advisory group which advises the Council, among other things, on its work with physical education teachers.

Disabled People

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what new initiatives he is taking to involve disabled people and their organisations in relation to fuller access to the arts.

Mr. Brooke: My Department aims to make the cultural life of the nation more widely accessible to everyone, including disabled people. To that end, the Department is taking the lead in an access initiative, to explore with our sponsored bodies how best to deliver this aim within existing resources.

In the specific field of the arts, the Department has demonstrated its commitment through its continuing support for ADAPT, established in partnership with the Carnegie (UK) Trust with the aim of adapting arts-related buildings to make them more accessible. For its part, the Arts Council for England has an established record in promoting the interests of disabled people, and is committed to maintaining its vigorous approach in these matters.

Sport and Recreation Qualifications

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what guidance his Department has given the Sports Council with regard to the development of national vocational qualifications for sport and recreation.

Mr. Sproat: None. The Sports Council chairs the industry lead body for sport and recreation and receives guidance in relation to this role from the Employment Department and the National Council for Vocational Qualifications.

English Heritage

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what benefits have accrued from English Heritage's transfer of management of a number of its properties to (a) English Heritage, (b) the new managers of the properties and (c) the Exchequer.

Mr. Brooke: In pursuance of the policies in its "Forward Strategy", English Heritage sought my agreement to the transfer of 22 sites to local management in March this year. Local management arrangements provide opportunities for improved cost-effectiveness and can bring benefits in terms of local enthusiasm for and commitment to the properties concerned, as well as additional resources for their preservation and presentation to the public. It is too early to quantify the extent of these benefits. However, I have agreed with English Heritage that it will keep the success of alternative management schemes under review and will formally evaluate the effectiveness of the policy in two years' time.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what guidance he has given on the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to the staff of English Heritage employed at properties whose management is to be transferred to other bodies such as the National Trust.

Mr. Brooke: The Department of National Heritage has issued advice to English Heritage on the application of the Transport of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981, in accordance with the guidance given by Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 11 March 1993, Official Report, columns 648-49. English Heritage follow this guidance in all relevant cases where the management of English Heritage properties is transferred to other bodies.

Royal Palaces

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the state ceremonial occasions, and expenditure on them by his Department, referred to under the heading "Occupied Royal Palaces", in his Department's expenditure plans for 1994-95, Cm 2511.

Mr. Sproat: The state ceremonials for which the Department has responsibility the planned expenditure on these for 1994-95 is as follows:

Commonwealth Day Flag Flying	14,000
State visit President of Zimbabwe	210,000
Her Majesty The Queen's Birthday Parade	44,000
United Nations Day Flag Flying	2,200
Remembrance Sunday	65,000
Association of Jewish ex-servicemen and women (AJEX)	1,000
	336,000
Additional costs
Fees/storage/repairs	218,600
Total	554,800

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will give a breakdown of his Department's estimated £11 million expenditure for 1994-95 on the Historic Royal Palaces Agency.

Mr. Sproat: Of the £11 million public expenditure allocated to the Historic Royal Palaces Agency for 1994-95:

£3 million has been transferred to the Royal Armouries in year towards the cost of the new museum in Leeds;

£1·5 million will be spent on modernising fire detection and prevention systems in line with the recommendations of the Bailey Inquiry following the Windsor fire; and the remainder will go towards other capital conservation and improvement schemes, building maintenance and running costs.

Three quarters of the agency's costs are met from commercial receipts.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will give a breakdown for each royal palace of the £20·6 million due to be spent by his Department in 1994-95 on the occupied royal palaces.

Mr. Sproat: The amounts planned to be spent on each of the occupied royal palaces in 1994-95 are as follows:

	£ million
Buckingham Palace	4·043
Windsor Castle	5·910
St James's Palace and Clarence House	2·998
Kensington Palace	1·171
Utilities/salaries and ancillary costs	6·469
Total	20·591

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what are the other historic buildings referred to in his Department's expenditure plans 1994-95, Cm 2511, under the heading "Occupied Royal Palaces"; and how much of the £26·4 million total for this period will be spent on them.

Mr. Sproat: The other historic buildings under this heading for which the Department has some responsibility are: Apsley house, the Royal Naval college at Greenwich, Osborne house and the Albert memorial. The Department also has responsibility for maintenance of Trafalgar square, and certain statues in London.

Planned expenditure in 1994-95 on these buildings and structures is £3·1 million. Additionally up to £1 million is being made available by English Heritage towards the restoration of the Albert memorial.

Cultural Services

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the likely impact on national museums and galleries in the United Kingdom of the EU sixth directive relating to the VAT treatment of cultural services.

Mr. Sproat: Discussions are continuing between my officials and those of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise about the implications and scope of such an exemption. The views that my Department has received from the national museums and galleries have been taken into account during these discussions, and those organisations will be consulted on further developments.

Correspondence

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he will reply to the letter of the right hon. Member for Guildford of 23 March requesting urgent action on behalf of a constituent.

Mr. Brooke: My private office replied on 3 May, informing the right hon. Gentleman that the letter in question was properly a matter for the Department of Trade and Industry, which has undertaken to reply substantively.

Outdoor Activity Centres

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement about the contribution made by the Sports Council in drawing up the code of practice for outdoor adventure activity providers.

Mr. Sproat: The Sports Council is contributing its expertise to the development of a voluntary accreditation scheme for outdoor activity providers through its membership of the English tourist board's activity centre advisory committee. This Department has observer status on ACAC. The new code of practice, agreed at the committee's last meeting, will provide an important mechanism for ensuring that centres operate to nationally agreed safety standards. The committee has also agreed a programme of pilot inspections over the summer as part of the process of devising sports-specific guidelines and the Sports Council and the English tourist board will be helping to fund this work.

WALES

Strategic Development Scheme

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been allocated under the strategic development scheme, and, prior to the introduction of the scheme, how much was spent through (a) the urban programme, (b) the rural initiative, (c) projects of regional and national importance and (d) special project schemes for each year since 1989-90 for (i) each district council and (ii) Wales.

Mr. Redwood: 1994-95 strategic development scheme allocations to district councils in Wales, together with the all-Wales total, is provided in table 1. Details of expenditure between 1989-90 and 1993-94 through the urban programme, rural initiative, projects of regional and national importance and special projects schemes are in tables 2 to 5.

Notes:

[1] Allocation not expenditure data provided for 1989-90. Expenditure details are not available on a consistent basis with future years because of the introduction of local authority capital expenditure controls in 1990-91. From this date information collected relates solely to local authorities expenditure against money provided through the Urban Programme, excluding any local authority expenditure financed through loans. Before this date authorities funded some of the schemes approved under the Urban Programme by raising loans and therefore only included appropriate loan charge payments on the payment returns.

[2] Actual expenditure details not available until local authorities annual Audited claims are received at the end of the year.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date the Government decided that the White Paper on local government in Wales should not contain proposals for unitary authorities for Meirionnydd and Montgomeryshire.

Mr. Redwood: It is not the practice to give details of internal discussions on policy matters.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Care Homes

11. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to review the cases of residents of care or nursing homes in receipt of a preserved entitlement to income support.

Mr. Scott: Income support at the higher levels is paid to 284,000 people in residential care and nursing homes at a cost of £2·7 billion, compared with support for just 12,000 at a cost of £10 million in 1979.

These limits are reviewed each year.

Maxwell Pensions Unit

12. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a further statement on the work of his Department's Maxwell Pensions Unit.

Mr. Hague: The Maxwell Pensions Unit continues to work with all concerned to encourage the resolution of disputes as quickly as possible. The unit provides substantial administrative support to the Maxwell Pensioners Trust global settlement initiative, which aims to secure the pension rights of all Maxwell scheme members.

Child Support Agency

13. Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has had in the last month on his policy on the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: During April 1994 Ministers received representations from hon. Members, organisations and members of the public about various child support issues, some favourable, others not.

14. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he now estimates the Child Support Agency will collect in its first year of operation.

Mr. Burt: Provisional figures show that to the end of March the Agency had recorded £210 million as collected. This is not the total amount for the year, however. It does not include, for example, maintenance paid direct by absent parents to parents with care where benefit is not an issue. Nor does it include some other amounts collected which will be scored retrospectively.

15. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to meet hon. Members to discuss the working of the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Lilley: Ministers always give sympathetic consideration to requests from hon. Members to discuss particular issues.

18. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further changes he expects to introduce to the Child Support Agency.

23. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to amend the Child Support Act 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review the working of the Child Support Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: We have no immediate plans for change but are keeping the operation of the Child Support Agency under review.

25. Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are now paying maintenance as a result of the Child Support Agency's activities who were not paying it previously.

Mr. Burt: As at 31 March, 205,540 maintenance assessments had been completed. It is estimated that almost 60 per cent. of cases taken on by the agency were not already receiving maintenance.

27. Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received concerning proposals for further changes in the child support regulations.

Mr. Burt: Between 5 April 1993 and 30 April 1994 Ministers received 13,081 letters about child support. The cost of establishing how many of these suggest changes to regulations would be disproportionately high.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what have been the changes in family credit payments during the period of the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: The information provided in the table is for 31 March 1993, immediately prior to the introduction of the Child Support Agency, and 31 October 1993, the latest date for which information is available.

	March 1993[1]	October 1993[2]
Number of Family Credit recipients	485,000	520,000
Number of recipients with maintenance	66,000	80,000
Number of recipients without maintenance	419,000	440,000
Average award of all Family Credit recipients	£42·34	£45·97
Average award of recipients with maintenance	£45·90	£48·40
Average award of recipients without maintenance	£41·78	£45·53

[2] Source: Five per cent. sample of Family Credit recipients at 31 October 1993.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received regarding publication of the Child Support Agency collection and enforcement manual.

Mr. Burt: There have been a small number of representations regarding the publication of the Child Support Agency's collection and enforcement manual. However, there is good reason for the manual not to be available as it contains detailed guidance on the actions to be taken when enforcing, or deciding whether to enforce child maintenance and could allow a person liable to pay maintenance to delay or possibly avoid enforcement action being brought against him or her.

Benefits Uprating

16. Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if it is Government policy regularly to uprate pensions and other benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: Yes. We have uprated retirement pension and most other benefits in line with prices or better each year since 1979. This April, the uprating of retirement pension—and most other benefits—included an additional element, above the increase in prices, for extra help with the cost of VAT on fuel.

Pensions

17. Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much total pension incomes have increased per annum between 1979 and the latest year for which figures are available; and what was the equivalent figure between 1974 and 1979.

Mr. Hague: Between 1979 and 1990-91, the latest year for which figures are available, pensioners' total income from state pension and occupational pension grew at an estimated average annual rate of 3·1 per cent. for all pensioners.

The estimated average annual rate of growth between 1974 and 1979 was 0·4 per cent.

Child Care Allowance

20. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he currently makes of the number of families which will benefit from the introduction of the disregard for child care.

22. Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families will benefit from the recent introduction of a child care allowance in family credit.

Mr. Burt: We expect that 150,000 families will benefit from the introduction of the child care disregard. This includes 50,000 expected to take up work as a direct result of the change.

Management Consultants

21. Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about his Department's use of management consultants.

Mr. Scott: Management consultancy firms have mainly been used by the Department to assist with the development and maintenance of the major computer systems introduced to support the Department's business. These systems play a major part in enabling the Department and its agencies to deliver an efficient and professional service.

The introduction of these systems together with the use of consultants in other business areas has improved the quality of services provided throughout the Department.

Social Security Expenditure

28. Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of spending on social security in the current year.

Mr. Hague: Currently the grand total of social security spending is expected to be £88·6 billion in 1994-95. This figure has been taken from the 1994 Social Security Department report.

Mobile Telephones and Pagers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) portable telephones, (b) pagers and electronic bleepers and (c) car telephones are currently used by his Department; what are the annual costs of operating this equipment; and to which personnel it is made available.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested. The available information is in the table. The equipment is provided where a valid business case for its purchase and use is made by the individual/unit concerned.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioner tax units receive occupational pensions; if he will break this figure down into bands of occupational pension income of £1,000, up to a maximum of £20,000; and if he will give figures for the last five years.

Mr. Hague: Information for the years 1987 to 1990-91 —the latest available—is in the tables:

Housing Benefit

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the annual cost of housing benefit being paid to (a) tenants of local authorities, (b) tenants of housing associations and (c) tenants of private landlords.

Mr. Hague: The available information is in the table.

Housing Benefit Expenditure in Great Britain

	1992-93 £ million	1993-94 £ million
Local Authority Tenants	4,347	5,004
Private Tenants[1]	3,257	3,817

Data Source:
Social Security Departmental Report 1994.
Notes:
[1] Separate information on the amount of Housing Benefit paid to Housing Association tenants is not available and is included in the private tenants total.

Incapacity Benefits

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will introduce arrangements to allow people receiving benefits for incapacity to do voluntary work.

Mr. Scott: Regulations were laid before Parliament on 22 April 1994 and come into force today. These regulations will enable people to continue to be accepted as incapable of work for the purposes of sickness benefit, invalidity benefit and severe disablement allowance if they are doing voluntary work for up to 16 hours a week.

Local Offices

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce legislation to elect directly boards of management to all social security offices.

Mr. Scott: No. It would serve no purpose other than to result in an increase in bureaucracy. Customers and their representatives are already consulted regularly so their views can inform future service planning.

Centenarians

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many telegrams he sent to (a) male and (b) female centenarians in the past year and five, 10 and 16 years ago; what was the cost to public funds in each of those years at current prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not available. Such information as is available is as follows:

Number of telegrams sent to centenarians

	1988	1993
Male	238	311
Female	1,904	2,589

The approximate cost of each telegram, exclusive of staff time, is currently £2·65.

Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many hours of civil servant time, and at what cost, was spent on drafting new clauses and amendments to the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill.

Mr. Scott: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Lord President of the Council on 12 May at column 213.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received since Friday 6 May from disabled people's organisations and others regarding progress on the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill; what has been the nature of such representations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: To date I have received eight letters and a small number of telephone calls relating to the future of the Bill which is scheduled to continue its Report stage on 20 May.

I announced the Government's plans for combating discrimination against disabled people during the debate on Report of the Bill on 6 May at column 996 and gave further details in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Tiverton (Mrs. Browning) on 10 May at column 136.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the calculations underlying the cost compliance assessment in respect of the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill.

Mr. Scott: The basis for the calculations is contained within the compliance cost assessment, copies of which were placed in the Library on 5 May.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when was the last date before 6 May that he discussed the progress of the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill with the Prime Minister.

Mr. Lilley: There was a discussion at Cabinet on 5 May which focused on the Government's own proposals on civil rights for disabled people and the compliance cost assessment of the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill.

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for the Barnsley/Doncaster TEC (a) the names and addresses of the directors, (b) their current salary and (c) what relevant experience they had for their appointment.

(b) TEC Directors are non executive and therefore do not draw salaries from the TEC, the exception being the Chief Executive who is, in the case of Barnsley and Doncaster TEC, an Executive Director. The company's annual statutory report and accounts for the year ended 1993 show Directors Remuneration of £45,000.
(c) Details of TEC Director selection can be found in the TEC Operating Agreement (1994) paragraphs 12.3—12.3.6., which is held in the Library. The Barnsley and Doncaster TEC ensures that each Director receives relevant induction, training and development throughout their appointment with the TEC.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been (a) the total money spent, (b) the percentage of that money allocated according to decisions made by Ministers on competitive bids and (c) the percentage of that money allocated according to some statistical measure of need for the Barnsley/Doncaster TEC since its inception.

Miss Widdecombe: (a) Total funding from the Department to Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council from its inception in January 1990 to the end of 1993-94 was £82,109 million.

(b) Nil by Employment Department to the end of 1993-94.

(c) All budgets take into account the needs of the client groups and local labour market factors. In particular, TECs receive sufficient funds to meet the youth training guarantee.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people received assistance from the North Yorkshire training and enterprise council in 1993-94.

Miss Widdecombe: For the year ended 31 March 1994 approximately 11,000 people received specific assistance from the North Yorkshire training and enterprise council. The North Yorkshire TEC offers a diverse range of products and services which consist of a range of vocational training programmes for both employed and unemployed people, courses aimed at people wishing to start their own business, courses aimed at existing businesses and provision of information to individuals and businesses.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 to 19-year-olds were placed or assisted on training programmes by the North Yorkshire training and enterprise council in 1993-94.

Miss Widdecombe: During 1993-94, 2,184 young people aged 16 to 18 commenced on youth training in addition to the 2,700 who were already in training on 1 April 1993.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has taken to secure an abatement in relation to those training and enterprise council secondees from his Department who have taken advantage of the voluntary early retirement scheme and who are still in full-time employment with those training and enterprise councils.

Miss Widdecombe: The abatement rules apply only to civil servants who left the service with an award of pension under the principal civil service pension scheme or the superannuation Acts and are re-employed in the civil service or in employment or offices to which the scheme applies. Training and enterprise councils are private companies to which the scheme does not apply.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each training and enterprise council in each of the last three years the endorsements for training purposes categorised A, B and C.

Miss Widdecombe: As the information is contained in a number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of his Department's staff who were seconded to the (a) North West Wales, (b) Gwent, (c) North East Wales and (d) West Wales training and enterprise councils have taken advantage of the voluntary early retirement scheme while remaining in employment with the TEC; and at what cost to the voluntary early retirement scheme.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 13 May 1994]: I understand that some 27 departmental staff who were on secondment to training and enterprise councils took voluntary early retirement under the early retirement schemes which the Department ran in Wales and are now employed by TECs. I believe that three are with North West Wales TEC, six with Gwent TEC, six with North East Wales TEC and 11 with West Wales TEC. I also believe that one is employed with Mid Glamorgan TEC. The early retirement costs of these releases amounted to £650,326 for the 1993-94 financial year, with ongoing annual compensation payments totalling some £181,590 payable until recipients reach age 60. Had all 27 returned to the Department before being given early retirement, the costs incurred would, of course, have been the same, Had they remained, the Department would have been responsible for their salaries and pensions.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds of the application of voluntary early retirement schemes to secondees from his Department to training and enterprise councils in Wales, as described in the letter from the Under-Secretary of State for Employment to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West dated 20 April, combined with the absence of a clawback mechanism for the former civil servants benefiting from the early retirement scheme but continuing in full-time employment with those training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 12 May 1994]: The total cost to the Department in the 1993-94 financial year was £650,326 for the release of the 27 individuals concerned. Ongoing compensation payments totalling some £181,590 are also payable until the recipients reach age 60. These 27 cases in Wales were out of a total of 1,915 early retirements from the Department in 1993-94. Had all 27 returned to the Department before being given early retirement the costs incurred would, of course, have been the same. Had they remained employed, the Department would have been responsible for their salaries and pensions.

Employment Appeal Tribunal

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the work of the Employment Appeal Tribunal.

Miss Widdecombe: The Employment Appeal Tribunal is an independent judicial body which hears appeals on points of law from decisions of the industrial tribunals. In the 1993-94 financial year 990 such appeals were disposed of.

United Airlines

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will reply to the representations he has received from the hon. Member for Uxbridge concerning proposals by the United States Association of Flight Attendants to close all facilities not based in the United States of America; what assessment he has made of the effect of such proposals on the employment by United Airlines of British nationals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have replied to my hon. Friend today. I am aware that the Association of Flight Attendants is seeking to persuade United Airlines to close its domicile in London which employs about 350 British citizens. I understand the concern felt by British employees of United Airlines about this matter. The establishment, by United Airlines, of London-based flight attendants has benefited both the airline and its employees. I hope that the present dispute will be concluded in a way which allows the benefits to the company to continue and employment opportunities at Heathrow to grow.

Careers and Occupational Information Service

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what disciplinary action has been taken against officials in the careers and occupational information service as the result of the internal auditors' inquiry into contracts placed by COIC in 1993;

(2) if he will make a statement about the results of the internal auditors' inquiry into contracts entered into by the careers and occupational information service in 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: I can confirm that an investigation into the award of contracts by officials in the careers and occupational information centre has been held. The outcome is being dealt with under the Department's disciplinary procedures. These procedures have not yet been concluded.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total value of all contracts entered into by the careers and occupational information service in 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: The value of contracts and orders placed by the careers and occupational information service in 1993 was £2,221,259.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a seasonally adjusted breakdown of economic activity from spring 1979 to date, similar to table 7.1 in March 1994 Employment Gazette, by male and female, for each age group (a) 16 to 19 years, (b) 20 to 24 years, (c) 25 to 32 years, (d) 35 to 49 years, (e) 50 to 64 years male, (f) 50 to 59 years female, (g) 65 years and over male and (h) 60 years and over female, dividing the employee and self-employed categories into full time and part time.

Miss Widdecombe: Seasonally adjusted estimates are not available from the labour force survey for individual age groups. Unadjusted estimates from 1984 for the age groups specified in the question can be obtained from the Quantime LFS service available in the Library.

Apprentice Scheme

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what Government funding is envisaged for his proposed modern apprentice scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: Some 1·25 billion will be made available for youth credits and modern apprenticeships over the next three years. Employers will also play their part by contributing to the initiative.

SCOTLAND

Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he has given on the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to cleaning contracts at Glasgow royal and Yorkhill hospitals.

Mr. Stewart: Comprehensive guidance on market testing in the NHS—formerly competitive tendering—was issued to all health boards and NHS trusts on 6 October 1993. This consolidated all earlier guidance which had been issued since 1987 when competitive tendering was introduced in the NHS in Scotland. The guidance addressed all aspects of market testing including a section on the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981. Copies of the guidance have been placed in the Library of the House.

Strathclyde PTA

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will include the Dumbarton district council area within the new Strathclyde passenger transport authority:

(2) if he will make it his policy that when the boundaries of the new Strathclyde passenger transport authority are set, that there are no new council areas that are partly inside and partly outside the boundaries of the passenger transport authority.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The future boundaries of the Strathclyde passenger transport area will be decided in due course after consultation with appropriate bodies. No decision will be taken on the extent of the boundaries until after consultations have taken place.

Exceptionally Gifted Pupils

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for national financial support for schools teaching the exceptionally gifted following local government reorganisation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Following local government reorganisation, as at present, decisions on expenditure on school education, including the teaching of exceptionally gifted children will be primarily a matter for the education authorities.

Community Care

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the basis for his conclusion in a draft Scottish Office circular that the private sector could provide a greater quantity and quality of service than that at present in the provision of community care.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer Friday 6 May 1994]: There is scope for the private sector to expand as overall provision of community care rises with increased investment of resources. By purchasing from a range of providers, local authorities will be able to offer a wide choice of services to their clients and maximise quality and value.

Child Minders

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provisions govern child minders hitting children in their care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 6 May 1994]: There are no specific provisions in legislation relating to the methods of control which may be used by child minders.

The Scottish Childminding Association recommends that, as a matter of good practice, child minders should not use corporal punishment. Scottish Office guidance on the Children Act 1989 also advises that such sanctions as smacking, hitting or shaking should not be used.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will outline his plans for making freely available to the public information, including inspectors reports, on the standard of care provided in private sector residential and nursing homes.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 6 May 1994]: In a consultation document issued last year, my right hon. Friend outlined his plans for taking forward a number of citizens charter principles in the inspection of social work services, including open reporting.

The reports of the social work services inspectorate are already available to the public. Local authority inspection units are responsible for inspecting residential establishments in the private, voluntary and public sectors. Some local authorities already make their reports available to the public; others plan to do so later this year. A further circular on inspecting social work services will be issued later this year which will include a date by which all local reports should be made available to the public.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to introduce trust status for social work services currently provided by regional councils.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 6 May 1994]: There are no plans to introduce such an arrangement for social work services.

Police Pay

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will issue a consultation document before he introduces performance-related pay for the police force.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 May 1994]: No. Agreements involving appraisal-related pay have been reached in the police negotiating board and submitted to my right hon. Friend. In addition, suitably representative working groups have been set up to advise on arrangements for performance appraisal in the police service.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in his calculations about the costs and savings of local government reorganisation, what figures he used for (a) cleansing services, (b) leisure and recreation services, (c) housing services, (d) planning services, (e) sewerage services, (f) water services, (g) transport services, (h) roads services, (i) fire services, (j) financial services, (k) economic development services, (l) architectural services, (m) social work services, (n) police services and (o) education services; and what percentage of the recurring revenue costs of each such service are attributable to labour costs.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 May 1994]: The Government's estimates of the costs and savings arising from the reorganisation of local government in Scotland were not calculated by reference to the service groupings requested and cannot therefore be broken down in this way.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on the rights of workers under the European acquired rights directive in the context of local government reorganisation in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 May 1994]: The application to individual local authority employees affected by local government reorganisation of the acquired rights directive and the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 falls to be determined as a matter of law, not of Government policy.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has as to the number of local authority employees in Scotland who are likely to be made redundant, (a) at the point of local government reorganisation and (b) in the longer term.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 May 1994]: The Government's White Paper which was published last July estimated that local government reorganisation may result in a reduction in staffing levels of between 700 and 2,200. It is expected that much, if not all, of this will be met by early retirements and natural wastage.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of recurring revenue costs are attributable to labour costs for (a) regional services, (b) district services and (c) overall for local government in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 May 1994]: The table shows the information requested for 1991-92, the latest period for which this is available. The notes to the table explain the basis of the figures.

Employee costs[1] as a percentage of local authority expenditure: 1991-92

	Regional services[2]	District services[2]	All authorities
Employee costs as percentage of total gross revenue expenditure	63·0	29·6	51·5
Employee costs as a percentage of gross revenue expenditure excluding loan charges and capital expenditure funded from revenue	71·5	40·6	62·1

Notes:
[1] Employee costs includes the employee costs of support services and of direct service organisations and direct labour organisations.
[2] Includes general fund services, housing, water, sewerage and trading services. Expenditure by islands authorities by service has been included with the appropriate mainland authority type for that service.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to changes in the dates for implementation of proposals in the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Bill depending on the progress of the Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 May 1994]: The Government have no plans to alter the dates in the Bill. Unless the Bill was enacted after the end of November 1994, the period between enactment and the establishment of the new authorities would not be significantly shorter than the period between enactment of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973 and the establishmkent of the present structure. We are confident that the proposed timetable is realistic and achievable, even if some authorities persist in their present policy of non-co-operation.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements he proposes to make for emergency planning under the proposed new system of local government in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 May 1994]: In accordance with the provisions of the Local Government etc (Scotland) Bill, the arrangements for emergency planning will be a matter for the new unitary authorities to determine. Scottish Office officials stand ready to discuss the issues involved with interested parties.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received over his proposals for local government reform in the highlands, indicating how many have supported and how many have opposed the creation of a single highland council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 12 May 1994]: Since publication in July 1993 of the White Paper "Shaping the Future—The New Councils". 51 representations have been received in support of the creation of a single unitary authority for the Highlands. Some 240 representations have either opposed this or favoured an alternative proposal.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which national health service trusts have sought approval for the purchase of motor vehicles for senior staff; what is the total value in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 May 1994]: NHS trusts are not required to seek prior approval for the purchase of motor vehicles. Information on numbers and costs is not held centrally.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he has issued to health boards or hospital trusts on collective bargaining to take account of the new circumstances created by the existence of hospital trusts as employers.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 12 May 1994]: No specific guidance as such has been issued. In 1 April 1993 however a contract was let for the provision of a pay intelligence unit service to the NHS in Scotland. Part of this service covers advice and training to individual employers on local pay matters.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on the co-ordination of wage and salary negotiations for trusts within (a) a health board area or (b) within Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 12 May 1994]: Existing NHS staff who transfer to the employment of NHS trusts are entitled to retain their national terms and conditions of employment—including pay. For these staff, pay negotiations are conducted on a United Kingdom-wide basis within the Whitley council and pay review body systems.

NHS trusts are free to negotiate locally on the pay of staff on trust terms and conditions of service. These arrangements would apply to new staff and to staff who have elected to transfer to the trust's terms and conditions of service.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what instructions the management executive of the Scottish health service has given to trusts concerning competitive tendering for hotel services; and what provision has been made for financial penalties on trusts which do not go out to tender.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 5 May 1994]: Comprehensive guidance on market testing in the national health service—formerly competitive tendering—was issued to health boards and national health service trusts on 6 October 1993. This consolidated all earlier guidance which had been issued since 1987 when competitive tendering was introduced in the national health service in Scotland. The guidance addressed all aspects of market testing including hotel services.

Although no financial penalties are imposed on national health service trusts which do not put services out to tender, in line with the Government's White Paper "Competing for Quality", CM 1730, they are required to prove that they are achieving value for money. The terms of the White Paper and the guidance apply equally to health boards and national health service trusts, which should include in their annual reports an account of their market testing programmes.

Private Education Costs

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total contribution from public funds to private schools in Scotland by way of (a) the assisted places scheme, (b) payments for the children of Foreign Office and defence personnel and (c) any other sources in the latest available financial year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 May 1994]: The information requested in respect of funding by central Government is set out below:

Financial year 1993-94

(a) Assisted Places Scheme	9,865,660
(b) Foreign and Commonwealth Office	265,409
(c) Grant-Aided Schools	2,586,906
Grant-Aided Special Schools	6,062,350
St. Mary's Music School Aided Places Scheme	634,512

In addition, funding by the Ministry of Defence for the Queen Victoria school, Dunblane, which provides education primarily for the sons of Scottish soldiers, sailors and airmen, for the financial year 1993-94 was £2·96 million; and the total estimated boarding school allowance paid for children of defence personnel at boarding schools in Scotland in the most recent year for which information is available—1991-92—was around £3·30 million.

Nursery Education

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assistance is given in the formula for aggregate external finance to the provision of nursery education.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 May 1994]: With the exception of the specific grants component, aggregate external finance itself is not hypothecated to particular local authority services. But AEF is distributed amongst authorities having regard to grant-aided expenditure assessments. The level of GAE for 1994-95 includes £21·104 million in respect of nursery teaching staff, and £742·939 million in respect of school non-teaching staff, property and so on. The latter assessment covers the full range of education authorities' services and the portion which relates to nursery education is not identifiable.

Mobile Telephones and Pagers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) portable telephones, (b) pagers and electronic bleepers and (c) car telephones are currently used by his Department; what are the annual costs of operating this equipment; and to which personnel it is made available.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 May 1994]: At present there are 271 portable telephones in use with annual running costs amounting to £106,130; 292 pagers/ electronic bleepers costing £33,334 annually and 30 car telephones with an annual cost of £21,280. Equipment is used by officers requiring mobile communication facilities with allocations decided by local line management.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to make local enterprise companies follow the Government's guidelines on open government in respect of their training functions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 12 May 1994]: My right hon. Friend has no such plans. The new code of practice on Government information which came into force on 4 April 1994, applies to central Government Departments, their agencies and a number of other public bodies. The local enterprise companies are limited companies and the code does not therefore apply to them or to their contractors.

Industrial Development

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made as to the areas in which industrial development is inhibited by lack of land supply.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 12 May 1994]: The latest figures from the 1992 industrial sites register show that there is a versatile supply of sites for business and industry in Scotland. At present rates of uptake, and even after excluding land on large sites of over 50 hectares which are generally reserved long term for single users, there is still some 25 years supply at national level. Most sites are available for development within one year and have either the benefit of planning permission or allocation in a development plan.

No planning authority has indicated through the data which the authorities provide for the ISR that industrial development is being inhibited by a lack of land supply. The table, compiled from the industrial sites register, indicates the pattern of supply for 1992.

Supply of industrial sites and land by region, 1992

Region	Number of sites	Area (hectares)
Borders	26	58
Central	23	399
Dumfries and Galloway	33	148
Fife	65	632
Grampian	114	528
Highland	121	2,042
Lothian	93	811
Strathclyde	370	1,949
Tayside	96	308
Orkney	4	7
Western Isles	2	2
Shetland	17	587
Total	964	7,471

The issue of supply at the local level was addressed in national planning policy guideline 2—land for business and industry, October 1993. It is stated that planning authorities should have regard to the objective of providing not only an adequate amount of marketable land for business and industry but an improved choice and range in terms of quality, size and location. It stated that local plans should update the supply by re-allocating sites which stand little chance of development to suitable alternative uses, and find additional sites of high quality, especially for business class development.

The enterprise bodies, of course, also have a remit to ensure that business establishment and growth is not constrained by a lack of suitable sites and to work with the private sector to redress failures in the industrial property market. We would therefore expect the local enterprise companies to work, with others, to tackle situations which arise where lack of suitable land was inhibiting development.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made as to the supply of industrial accommodation in the 10,000 sq ft and above range in the west of Scotland; and what plans he has to address any shortfall.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 12 May 1994]: My right hon. Friend has made no such assessment. Scottish Enterprise does, however, hold data on industrial property and, following consultation with the Locate in Scotland office, believes that there is a reasonable supply of industrial units up to 15,000 sq ft in size. Scottish Enterprise is, consequently, seeking to secure the provision of larger industrial units where there are only limited numbers available.

Motor Trade

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of jobs in Scotland in (a) the manufacture, (b) servicing of and (c) retailing of (1) motor vehicles, (2) goods vehicles and (3) buses and coaches; and what plans he has to increase these figures.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 12 May 1994]: Information derived from the Employment Department's September 1991 census of employment, in the most disaggregated form available, is shown in the table. Estimates of employees in employment in the manufacture or repair of goods vehicles, buses and coaches are not separately available.

The Government's economic policies, by securing low inflation on a permanent basis and sound public finances over the medium term, are the best guarantee of increased jobs in these and other sectors of the Scottish economy.

Employment in Scotland in selected industries

	Employees in employment September 1991
Manufacturing
Motor vehicles[1] and their engines and motor vehicles bodies	1,800
Motor vehicle parts	1,700
Services
Retail distribution of motor vehicles and parts	17,300
Repair and servicing of motor vehicles	16,900

[1] Includes passenger cars and commercial vehicles.

Locate in Scotland

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what reports he has received from Locate in Scotland as to areas in which it is inhibited from helping inward investors by lack of industrial serviced sites.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 12 May 1994]: My right hon. Friend has received no such reports. Locate in Scotland has access to an adequate supply of industrial serviced sites and constantly reviews the situation in the light of demand.

ENVIRONMENT

Westminster Council

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been (a) allocated to and (b) spent by Westminster council for flood prevention work in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Curry: I have arranged for this information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the expenditure of Westminster council was provided (a) from central Government sources; and (b) by community charge or council tax subventions, in each of the last 20 years.

Mr. Curry: The available information is as follows:

1982-83—1989-90

	(1) Central Government Grants to Westminster City Council £'000	(2) Expenditure funded by grants, rates and revenue balances £'000	(3) 1/2 Percentage
1982-83	37,660	57,382	65·6
1983-84	16,028	62,425	25·7
1984-85	17,586	61,231	28·7
1985-86	19,458	64,297	30·3
1986-87	20,782	105,715	19·7
1987-88	21,619	98,197	22·0
1988-89	22,210	96,811	22·9
1989-90	22,013	108,686	20·3

Notes:

1. Grants comprise Rate Support Grant and relevant specific grants. Figures for 1989-90 are based on budget returns.
2. The functions of Westminster City Council changed following the abolition of the Greater London Council on 1 April 1986, and figures for years before this date are not therefore comparable with later years. Similarly the Inner London Education Authority was abolished on 1 April 1990 and figures for Westminster before this date are not therefore comparable with the figures for 1993-94 and 1994-95 shown below.
3. For the years before 1 April 1990 it is not possible to identify the amounts of domestic rates, as distinct from non-domestic rates, which were used to finance expenditure by Westminster City Council.
4. Figures for earlier years are not available.

1990-91—1992-93

Under the community charge system, Revenue Support Grant, Non-Domestic Rate entitlement and community charges were paid into the Collection Fund for the area. Westminster City Council's expenditure was funded largely by a demand on the Collection Fund, but this demand did not differentiate among the sources of income to the fund, and it is not therefore possible to identify its components.

1993-94—1994-95

	(1) Central Government Grants and non-domestic rates entitlement £'000	(2) Revenue Expenditure £'000	(3) 1/2 Per cent.	(4) Council tax requirement £'000	(5) 4/2 Per cent.
1993-94	155,373	234,389	66·3	13,977	6·0
1994-95	160,722	226,904	70·8	7,609	3·4

Notes:

1. Grants comprise Revenue Support Grant, specific and special grants within Aggregate External Finance.
2. Revenue expenditure is defined as expenditure met from revenue balances, specific and special grants within AEF, Revenue Support Grant, non-domestic rate entitlement, and the Council Tax requirement.
3. The Council Tax requirement is the amount to be transferred from the Collection Fund to the billing authority's General Fund in respect of Council Taxes. It therefore includes amounts in respect of Council Tax benefit and Council Tax transitional relief.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money Westminster council has received in tourism grants in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Curry: The Government do not pay tourism grants to local authorities. However, allowances based on visitor numbers are made within the standard spending assessment system which has been used since 1990 to distribute revenue support grant to local authorities, and similar allowances were made in the grant-related expenditure assessment system which was used to distribute rate support grant up to that date. The allowances made for Westminster City Council over the last 10 years are shown in the table.

Contribution within SSA/GRE based on visitor numbers

Year	£ million
1994-95	5·5
1993-94	3·8
1992-93	3·9
1991-92	1·7
1990-91	0·7
1989-90	0·7
1988-89	0·6

Year	£ million
1987-88	0·4
1985-86	0·4

In 1994-95, the allowance was extended to include day as well as overnight visitors; data for this purpose had not previously been available. Other significant changes in the allowance similarly reflect changes in the methodology or the definitions used. Notably, in 1992-93, more recent information was used, allowing estimates of foreign visitor nights to be incorporated for the first time into the SSA formula; and in 1991-92 the weighting attributed to overnight visitors in the formula was increased, following representations from many resort authorities, from 25 per cent. to 50 per cent. of resident population.

Conservation

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many special protection area sites are currently designated in the United Kingdom;

(2) how many Ramsar sites are currently proposed in the United Kingdom; and if he will place a map of these sites in the Library;

(3) if he will place in the Library map refrences for the full geographical details of special protection area sites and Ramsar sites in the United Kingdom;

(4) how many United Kingdom special protection area sites are in coastal locations;

(5) how many Ramsar sites there are within two miles of a port boundary where the port is designated as a major port;

(6) how many sites currently proposed for designation as United Kingdom special protection area sites are in coastal locations;

(7) which Ramsar sites, or proposed Ramsar sites, would be eligible to be designated special protection area sites;

(8) how many proposed Ramsar sites there are in England;

(9) how many United Kingdom sites are currently proposed for designation as special protection areas;

(10) how many Ramsar sites are currently designated in the United Kingdom; and if he will place a map of these sites in the Library;

(11) if he will list the bodies in England, Wales and Scotland which are responsible for determining a proposed special protection area site;

(12) if he will list the bodies in England, Wales and Scotland which are responsible for determining Ramsar sites.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment, for Wales and for Scotland are responsible for determining Ramsar sites and special protection areas in England, Wales and Scotland respectively. They are advised by the nature conservation councils for the three countries.

Some 76 Ramsar sites have been designated in the United Kingdom. A map showing protected areas in the United Kingdom, including Ramsar sites and special protection areas is reproduced on page 84 of "Sustainable Development—The United Kingdom Strategy", Cm 2426, a copy of which is in the Library. Information on the number of Ramsar sites within two miles of a port boundary, where the port is designated as a major port, is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. There are a further 83 sites identified as being suitable for designation as Ramsar sites in the United Kingdom, of which 32 are in England. A list of Ramsar sites was published on 17 July 1991 Official Report, columns 201-6 and 217-22 and on 18 July 1991, Official Report, columns 254-55, which covered Great Britain sites only.

Some 86 special protection areas have been designated in the United Kingdom, of which 54 are in coastal locations. Some 151 potential special protection areas, which were included in the lists published in July 1991, remain to be designated, of which 89 are in coastal locations. Some 49 designated Ramsar sites in the United Kingdom are wholly or partly also special protection areas. Some 72 identified Ramsar sites in the United Kingdom are also potential special protection areas. A list of map references for the full geographical details of designated special protection area sites and Ramsar sites in the United Kingdom will be placed in the Library shortly. The list of potential Ramsar sites and special protection areas is being reviewed in the light of the most recent scientific knowledge and information. When this work is completed, map references indicating the location of the sites will be placed in the Library.

Environment Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 30 March, Official Report, columns 854-55, which of the member states of the Environment Council did not support the United Kingdom proposals on integrated pollution prevention and control.

Mr. Atkins: No member state expressed opposition to the development of legislation on integrated pollution prevention and control and Belgium, Denmark, France, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and Spain expressed general support for the approach adopted. The environment working group were asked to take forward work on the details of the proposals as quickly as possible.

Global Warming

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his assessment of the net effects on global warming of anthropogenic aerosols and particulates; and what assessment he has made of the global warming effects of particulates from diesel vehicles and the net effect of emissions from diesel vehicles on greenhouse gas emissions.

Mr. Atkins: The impact of anthropogenic aerosol particles on the climate is highly uncertain. In its 1992 Report the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change concluded that the present-day effect of all particles was probably a net cooling, with the cooling effect of sulphate aerosol particles exceeding the warming effect of particles containing elemental carbon, of which one source is diesel engine exhaust. The panel is currently reviewing this subject, in preparation for a report on the radiative forcing of climate due to be published later this year.

The main greenhouse gas emitted by diesel vehicles is carbon dioxide, and in 1992 these accounted for 6 per cent. of total United Kingdom CO_2 emissions.

Surface Water

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what decisions were taken at the European Commission meeting on 11 May regarding the adoption of a draft directive on the ecological quality of surface water.

Mr. Atkins: I understand that the European Commission has not announced any decision on this matter.

Local Government Reforms

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the effect on the local government superannuation scheme of the impending local government reforms and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Discussions have taken place with the local authority associations and other interested parties on superannuation issues. Our proposed amendments to the Local Government Superannuation Regulations 1986 will be issued for a period of statutory consultation shortly.

European Environmental Agency

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to meet the newly appointed Director General of the European Environmental Agency, to discuss the role of the agency in developing a database of markets and resources for clean technology products.

Mr. Atkins: None. Officials of the Department are in regular contact with Mr. Beltran, the newly appointed Director General of the European Environment Agency, and the United Kingdom is represented on the agency's management board, which is developing its work programme for this and future years.

Waste Management

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to ensure that holders of waste disposal licences have been given adequate notice by local authorities of the timing and terms of the introduction of waste management licensing fees and charges under section 41 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Atkins: The charging scheme was the subject of consultation exercises in August and December 1992. The Department recommended in the December 1992 consultation paper that waste regulation authorities should inform all disposal licence holders of the proposed scheme and the manner in which charges would be set by reference to descriptions and amounts of waste. My hon. Friend announced on 29 November 1993, Official Report, column 380, our intention to implement on 1 May 1994, the waste management licensing provisions of part II of the 1990 Act. On 30 November 1993 the Department wrote to the local authority associations informing them of the basis on which the 1993-94 fees and charges in the December 1992 consultation paper would be uprated to 1994-95; levels; and providing an indication of the changes to the scheme being considered in the light of consultation.

The scheme made under section 41 of the 1990 Act was laid before the House on 24 March, Official Report, column 395, and came into force on 1 May 1994. Paragraph 3(13) of the scheme requires waste regulation authorities to serve a written notice on licence holders stating the date on which the subsistence charge will be due; the amount of the charge; the descriptions of activities, waste and amounts of waste by reference to which the charge has been calculated; and the method of payment. Paragraph 3(14) requires the notice to be served by 31 May; and paragraph 3(12) provides that the 1994-95 charge becomes due on 30 June 1994.

Winget Houses

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Winget-type houses there are in each local authority possessing housing of this design; and of those how many are (a) rented in the public sector, (b) rented in the private sector, (c) owner-occupied, with method of repair undertaken and (d) private sector, without option for repair.

Sir George Young: The table shows the numbers of Winget houses reported by English local authorities at the outset of the housing defects scheme which were (a) in their ownership and (b) in private ownership and eligible under the scheme; and (c) reinstated or (d) repurchased under the scheme by 1 April 1993. Data are not collected centrally on Winget houses which are within the private rented sector or whose owners are ineligible for assistance under the scheme.

Kingston upon Hull	880	9	—	4
Norwich	469	17	—	14
Wakefield	1,210	75	2	51

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what remedies are available for owner-occupiers who discover that their homes are of a Winget type and cannot be sold on the housing market.

Sir George Young: To be eligible for assistance under part XVI of the Housing Act 1985, owners of Winget houses must have purchased from the public sector before 26 April 1984, or within 12 months after this date if they bought in ignorance of the defect and at a price which did not take account of it. Provided that such owners apply to their local authority by 30 November 1994, they are entitled to have their homes reinstated to mortgageable standard, or repurchased at 95 per cent. defect-free value if the authority so determines.

Hunting

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the powers of local authorities to control hunting activities on publicly owned land.

Mr. Baldry: The power of an authority to control hunting activities on its land depends both on the powers under which the land is held, and on any applicable local Acts, byelaws and covenants. The court has recently held that an authority, having acquired land under section 120 of the Local Government Act 1972 for the benefit, improvement or development of its area, cannot have regard to moral considerations when deciding to ban stag hunting on that land, but has to make an objective judgment about the proper management of the land.

Environment Agency

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now intends to bring forward the Bill to pave the way for the establishment of an Environment Agency.

Mr. Atkins: The Queen's Speech announced that paving provisions for the Environment Agency would be introduced in this Session. We intend to introduce a Bill shortly.

Habitats and Species Directive

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with the Environment Commissioner of the European Union in relation to the obligations of the sea fisheries committees of England and Wales for enforcement duties under the habitats directive.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 12 May 1994]: None.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of houses constructed in the last 10 years would qualify for a standard assessment procedure rating of (a) 55, (b) 60, (c) 65, (d) 70 and (e) 75.

Sir George Young [holding answer 13 May 1994]: To answer the question as posed would require exact data on the characteristics of all dwellings built in the period. This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

However, the proposed revisions to the building regulations, in addition to leading to an improvement in energy efficiency of between 25 and 35 per cent. compared with the current standards, will also require all new dwellings and conversions to dwellings to obtain an SAP rating.

Written Answers to Questions

HOME DEPARTMENT

Deportees

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will describe the head restraint used on deportees; and if he will make a statement as to the use of this type of restraint.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The use of mouth restraints was suspended in August 1993. Following a joint review of removal procedures by the Home Office and the police; it was decided in January this year that their use should not be resumed.

Temazepam

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answers of 1 December 1993, Official Report, column 625, 17 February 1994, Official Report, column 903, and 20 April 1994, Official Report, column 512, what conclusions his Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs reached regarding the misuse of Temazepam; what aspects of those conclusions have caused the delay in his reaching a decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The recommendations of the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs in relation to Temazepam have implications for a number of Government Departments.

I am considering the council's recommendations in consultation with ministerial colleagues. I am afraid that this has taken longer than I would have wished. I hope to be able to announce a decision before too long.

Exhaust Fumes

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) roadside checks of vehicles in respect of motor vehicle exhaust fumes and (b) prosecutions following such checks took place in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Figures obtained from the vehicle inspectorate—an executive agency of the Department of Transport—show that 48,857 roadside exhaust smoke/emission checks were carried out in Great Britain in the period 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994. A total of 587 prohibitions were issued as a result of these checks.

Information on prosecutions following such tests is not available centrally.

Trans-sexuals

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to amend British marriage law to recognise trans-sexuals in their reassigned roles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Probation Hostels

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what grant was made in respect of probation hostels in the west midlands in 1993-94; what grant is being made in 1994-95; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Total revenue grant for west midlands' approved hostels for 1993-94 was £1,908,804; for 1994-95 the preliminary figure is £1,513,000. I cannot add anything further as this matter is currently sub judice.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the part played by probation hostels in contributing to community safety and tackling the attitudes of criminals and underlying causes of criminal behaviour.

Mr. Maclean: Chapter 7 of "National Standards for the Supervision of Offenders in the Community" deals with the purpose and role of approved hostels. A copy of "National Standards" has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from judges and magistrates in the west midlands about the funding of probation hostels in the west midlands.

Mr. Maclean: A number of representations have been received from judges and magistrates in the west midlands arguing for the retention of all the approved hostels now in use there.

Prison Cells

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were placed in cells built for fewer prisoners than were being housed there in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 17th May 1994.

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about cell sharing.

The following table shows the numbers of prisoners who shared cells certified as normal accommodation for one person for the period April 1993 to March 1994.

Date	Two to a cell	Three to a cell
30 April 1993	7,236	114

Prisoners

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average distance from home a prisoner was placed in the last year for which figures are available; what was the average in 1985; and what was the average in 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 17 May 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the average distance from home a prisoner was placed in the last year for which figures are available.

No information is held centrally on the distance prisoners are placed from home. However, the National Prison Survey, conducted in January and February 1991, asked prisoners who had received a visit in the three months prior to interview how far their most important visitor had to travel to visit them. The average distance, for all most important visitors, was 62 miles. No information is available for the years 1985 or 1979.

The National Prison Survey had a total sample of almost 4,000 offenders. The findings of the survey, including the information given above, have been published as "The National Prison Survey 1991: main findings", Home Office Research Study No. 128.

Private Security Firms

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 10 May, Official Report, column 71, what plans he has to ensure that a record is kept of the private security firms employed by his Department.

Mr. Howard: I am arranging for information to be collated on the extent of the use of private security firms employed by my Department.

Prison Ombudsman

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 10 May, Official Report, column 72, what Coopers and Lybrand was asked to do during the recruitment of the prison ombudsman.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Coopers and Lybrand Executive Resourcing was asked to undertake a search to identify candidates in addition to those identified through advertisement, to attend sifts, interview search candidates and provide reports on all short-listed candidates.

Car Thefts

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cars have been stolen in each region in England since the passage of the Aggravated Vehicle Taking Act 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The information available relates to theft of all motor vehicles and is contained in the following table.

Offences of theft of motor vehicles, April 1992 to December 1993, by region

Region	[1]Number of thefts of vehicles
North West	170,425
North East	217,875
Midlands	112,905
Eastern	107,749
South East	294,835
South West	78,677

[1] Offences of aggravated vehicle taking and theft of a vehicle recorded by the police.

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been made under the charge of aggravated vehicle taking in each region of England; how many have been successful; what has been the average sentence in successful prosecutions in each region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Information for 1992 is given in the tables. 1993 data will not be available until the autumn. We are monitoring carefully both prosecutions and penalties under this new provision. It is still too early to draw many conclusions but early indications are that this measure is providing a useful weapon in our armoury against car crime.

DEFENCE

Oxford Research Group Seminar

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who represented his Department at the seminar on "Britain and the Non-Proliferation Regime: 1995 and Beyond", held in Oxford on 19 April, organised by the Oxford research group; and what benefits accrued to his Department from its representation.

Mr. Hanley: My Department was represented by the Director of Defence Policy. I understand that the seminar provided a useful forum for discussion on the approach to the 1995 conference of the parties to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Low Flying

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams) of 21 April 1994, Official Report, column 623, the reason the information requested regarding low-flying sorties is not available.

Mr. Hanley: The mean height and velocity of aircraft during low-flying sorties are not recorded.

Army Welfare Services

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current and future resources for Army welfare services and dedicated social services support for Army and ex-Army personnel.

Mr. Hanley: My Department continues to provide the appropriate level of welfare support which takes into account the needs of service personnel and their families. It does this through the unit command structure, and through MOD-funded organisations such as the Soldiers' Sailors' Airmen's Families Association—SSAFA.

In the United Kingdom, social services for service personnel, their dependants and all former service personnel are primarily a matter for local authorities. Overseas, these services are replicated by my Department and are available to all service personnel, Ministry of Defence UK-based civilian staff and dependants.

Courts Martial

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many courts martial have been undertaken, annually, in each of the services, in the last five years in which figures are available.

Mr. Hanley: The following table shows the annual number of courts martial undertaken by each of the three services in the last five years:

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993
Royal Navy	57	32	42	61	92
Army	676	837	703	706	636
Royal Air Force	157	148	147	138	133
Total	890	1,017	892	905	861

DDT

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies he has commissioned to assess health conditions resulting from the use of DDT in the armed forces.

Mr. Hanley: As there is no authoritative scientific evidence of any harmful effect of DDT on humans, there has been no reason for my Department to commission any such studies.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

New Businesses, North Yorkshire

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many new businesses have started in north Yorkshire in each year since 1978.

Mr. McLoughlin: The numbers asked for are not available. The best guide to trends in the number of business starts at county level come from VAT data. Figures are available for the years 1980 to 1992 and are published in "VAT Registrations and Deregistrations, County and District Analysis", 1980 to 1991, and 1992 editions. Both these documents are available in the Library of the House or on-line via NOMIS. For further information, contact the NOMIS team at NOMIS, Unit 3P, Mountjoy research centre, University of Durham DH1 3SW.

Small Businesses

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the impact on small businesses of the EC Commission proposal Com (94) 5813 to amend directive 77/388/EEC.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: All EC proposals for measures that are likely to impose a burden on United Kingdom business are subject to a compliance cost assessment including a small business litmus test. In light of the concerns recently expressed by United Kingdom business, in particular small business, a compliance cost assessment will be undertaken in consultation with those likely to be affected by the provisions in the proposal relating to the exemption of retail export goods. The line that the United Kingdom is taking in Brussels already takes account of the concerns expressed by United Kingdom small businesses. The assessments of the burdens that the proposal would impose should provide hard evidence in support of our negotiating line.

Gas Prices

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy that no changes in gas pricing will be allowed which provide for significant variations between regions.

Mr. Eggar: The plans for a new pricing structure for gas transportation, in the light of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's findings, were set out in a consultation document published by the Office of Gas Supply in December 1993. The matter is further considered in the joint consultative document, "Competition and Choice in the Gas Market", issued on 9 May 1994 by myself and the Director General of Gas Supply, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House, and I look forward to receiving the comments of all interested parties.

The Office of Gas Supply expects that the most likely outcome of charging realistic long distance pipeline costs will be for overall prices to move by plus or minus about 2·5 per cent.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has had on regionalised gas pricing for domestic consumers.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 9 May 1994]: I have received a number of representations.

The plans for a new pricing structure for gas transportation, in the light of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's findings, were set out in a consultation document published by Ofgas in December 1993. The matter is further considered in the joint consultative document "Competition and Choice in the Gas Market" issued on 9 May 1994 by myself and the Director General of Gas Supply, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. I look forward to receiving the comments of all interested parties.

The Office of Gas Supply expects that the most likely outcome of charging realistic long distance pipeline costs will be for overall prices to move by plus or minus about 2·5 per cent.

Water and Sewerage Industry

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has had about the appointment and dismissals undertaken by the Director General of Ofwat.

Mr. McLoughlin: Under Section 28 of the Water Industry Act 1991, the Director General of Water Services is required to consult the Secretary of State about the appointment of chairmen of the customer service committees. In this connection, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, has received a number of representations concerning the expiry of the appointment of the chairman of the Yorkshire committee in February 1994.

Post Offices, South Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many post offices and sub-post offices there currently are in south Yorkshire; and what were the figures for (a) 10 years and (b) 20 years ago.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that currently there are four crown post offices and 387 sub-post offices, including franchise and agency offices, in south Yorkshire. Corresponding figures for 10 years and 20 years ago are not available because of changes in Post Office Counters Ltd's regional organisation and in the local government structure in south Yorkshire since 1974.

Nuclear Export Policy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what decisions taken at the recent nuclear suppliers group meeting in Madrid will affect United Kingdom nuclear export policy.

Mr. Needham: The group adopted changes to the "Guidelines for Nuclear Transfers"—DOC INFCIRC 254 Part 1 Rev. 1 Mod 1—at the Madrid meeting. The effect of these changes is to strengthen the retransfer provisions in the guidelines and incorporate a new provision in the guidelines underlying the importance of members satisfying themselves that their exports would not contribute to the proliferation of nuclear weapons. Both changes are consistent with existing British policy.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) of 18 April, Official Report, column 357, if he will make it his policy to compile records of exports of biological agents in future.

Mr. Needham: Exports to certain destinations of biological agents specified in export control legislation, and for which an export licence has been granted, are now recorded.

Compliance Costs

Dr. Twinn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish details of the annual on-going compliance costs for new regulations affecting business for which his Department has completed compliance cost assessments.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Department of Trade and Industry completed 13 compliance cost assessments last year on draft legislation brought before Parliament. These were routinely published and copies are available in the Library of the House.

Post Office

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he is likely to complete his review of the Post Office.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade will announce the outcome to the review when decisions have been taken. We will not set an artificial date.

Sellafield

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for how many more years the B205 plant at Sellafield is expected to reprocess spent fuel from magnox reactors.

Mr. Eggar: This is a commercial matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc as operators of the plant.

Kuwait

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much business was attained by British firms in the clean-up of Kuwait after the Gulf war.

Mr. Needham: In the first 12 months of Al Awda—the Return—reconstruction phase, the United Kingdom won contracts and orders worth more than £500 million. The official United Kingdom exports to Kuwait for 1991, 1992 and 1993 were £178 million, £262 million and £312 million respectively. This does not accurately reflect the true level of exports to the market as many of the orders placed during reconstruction were routed through Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates and Bahrain.

Fire Safety Report

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what date the interdepartmental fire safety scrutiny is expected to report its findings to Ministers; and on what date that report will be (a) made available to the House and to the public and (b) published.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The report of the interdepartmental fire safety scrutiny is due to be completed on 25 May and will then be submitted by the scrutiny team to my right hon. Friends the President of the Board of Trade, the Home Secretary and the Secretaries of State for Employment and for the Environment.

No decisions will be taken about publication until ministerial colleagues have had an opportunity to consider the report.

Offshore Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of workers in the offshore oil and gas industry are not British.

Mr. Eggar: The percentage of workers in the offshore oil and gas industry in 1993 who are not British is estimated to be some 8 per cent. Details are published by my Department in the "Energy Report" volume 2, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to withdraw from the 16th licensing round any blocks recommended for withdrawal by the Joint Nature Conservation Committee.

Mr. Eggar: I will consult the Joint Nature Conservation Committee both before and after nominations are received for the 16th round and will take into account its comments when deciding on the blocks to be offered in the round.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which specific conditions attached to licenses for offshore oil exploration may be made available to the public under the Environmental Information Regulations 1992 in line with paragraph 6 of the Edinburgh Gazette announcement of 26 April.

Mr. Eggar: As was the case in the 14th round, I shall judge each application for such information on its merits having due regard to the provisions of the environmental information regulations. It is my intention to make available those conditions attached to licences for the purposes of protecting the environment.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) which non-governmental organisations he intends to consult prior to deciding which blocks to license in the 15th and 16th offshore licensing round;

(2) what specific plans he has to consult non-governmental organisations before deciding which blocks to license in the 15th and 16th rounds of offshore licensing.

Mr. Eggar: My officials consulted the Joint Nature Conservation Committee and a number of fishing organisations prior to deciding which blocks to offer in the 15th round.

We have already informed over 100 organisations, including the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, environmental groups, relevant local authorities and various fishing organisations, of our plans for the 16th round. Once the nominations for the 16th round are received at the end of July, these bodies will be offered the opportunity to comment on which blocks can be offered for licence.

Construction Task Force

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the construction task force was established; when it is expected to report; what are its terms of reference; what areas it is investigating; what is its membership; who employs each member; and in what capacity.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Warley, West (Mr. Spellar) on 30 March 1994, Official Report, column 766.

London First Centre

Mr. Congdon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance is to be given to the new London First centre for its overseas inward investment activities.

Mr. Sainsbury: I am pleased to announce that in addition to the grants for the six regional development organisations announced on 17 March, I have today offered £500,000 of grant-in-aid to the new London First centre for its overseas inward investment activities, covering the whole of London. The grant-in-aid is linked to the performance of specific inward investment promotion activities on behalf of the Invest in Britain Bureau.

The London First centre is an initiative by London First to establish for the first time an inward investment agency for London. The centre is being set up initially with support from local authorities, the private sector and my Department. Its aims are to promote London as a location for national and international business and industrial activity, for wealth and job creation in London.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many employees have worked on a full or part-time basis with the Scott inquiry liaison unit set up within his Department; when the unit was established; and when its work will be completed.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 13 May 1994]: The Scott inquiry liaison unit was set up on 23 November 1992. Seven people have worked in the unit on a full-time basis, though not all at the same time. Manning has usually been kept to four people, though currently it stands at three. The attendant registry has employed six people, two on a part-time basis. After the initial demands of setting up the registry, manning has generally stood at three people. The timing for the completion of the work of the unit and the registry depends upon the length of the inquiry.

Atlantic Computers Ltd.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if his inspectors have completed their inquiry into Atlantic Computers Ltd.; and when he expects to publish their report.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 16 May 1994]: The inspectors completed their report on 22 April. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is considering whether the report should be published in line with usual practice. However the report is unlikely to be published in the immediate future in view of possible prejudice to current criminal proceedings.

Chemical Imports

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to prohibit the importation, for recycling, of certain chemicals from other EC countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

The new control regime under the EC Waste Shipments Regulation and the United Kingdom's associated Transfrontier Shipment Of Waste Regulations 1994 came into force on 6 May. This legislation enables the United Kingdom to fulfil its obligations under the Basel convention, to which the United Kingdom became a party on 8 May. The Government are considering the use of their powers under the new legislation and will announce its proposals in due course.

As regards exports of waste for recovery, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State reported on the decision taken at the second conference of the parties to the Basel convention in his answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 30 March 1994 Official Report, columns 866-67. Article 16(3)(b) of the Waste Shipments Regulation prohibits exports of waste for recovery where the competent authority of dispatch has reason to believe that the waste will not be managed in accordance with environmentally sound methods in the country of destination.

The decision recognized that transboundary movements of hazardous wastes from OECD to non-OECD states have a high risk of not constituting an environmentally sound management of hazardous wastes. It is the Government's understanding, therefore, that, save in exeptional circumstances, exports of hazardous wastes for recovery from the United Kingdom to non-OECD countries are prohibited by virtue of article 16(3)(b)—

(a) unless and until those countries wishing to receive such wastes satisfy the requirements set out in paragraph 3 of the decision, regarding notification to the Basel secretariat about the categories, quantities and management of acceptable waste imports;

and

(b) the competent authority of dispatch is satisfied in any particular case that the wastes will be managed in an environmentally sound manner in the country of destination.

ENVIRONMENT

Toxic Waste

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how he is planning to implement the policy for industrialised countries to be self sufficient in waste by restricting or banning the importation of toxic waste into the United Kingdom when the Transfrontier Shipment of Waste Regulations 1994 come into force on 6 May;

(2) when he plans to publish the waste management plan referred to in the Transfrontier Shipment of Waste Regulations 1994 which will contain the Government's policies in relation to the import and export of waste for recovery or disposal into and out of the United Kingdom, in accordance with EC directive 75/442/EEC(a).

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I have given today to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) to the President of the Board of Trade.

Assembly of European Regions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has received from the Assembly of European Regions meeting in Shrewsbury on 14 April on the role of regional participation in environmental policy.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Climate Change Programme

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his assessment of the current relative radiative forcing effects of carbon dioxide, methane, ozone, nitrous oxide, halocarbons and water vapour with respect to pre-industrial levels; how he expects this to change in the future; and what implications this has for the United Kingdom climate change programme.

Mr. Atkins: The intergovernmental panel on climate change published estimates of current forcings, and possible future forcings under a range of scenarios, in its 1992 report, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. The panel will publish a new report on the radiative forcing of climate, containing revised estimates, later this year.

The United Kingdom's climate change programme, published earlier this year, contains a package of measures aimed at meeting our commitments under the United Nations framework convention on climate change. The programme makes clear that the United Kingdom will work within forthcoming reviews of the convention, which will take account of the latest scientific evidence from the IPCC, towards ensuring that the ultimate objective of the convention is met. The United Kingdom's national programme will be reviewed and developed in the context of that process.

Europe's Environmental Challenge

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what request for assistance his Department received from The Economist intelligence unit in assistance in the preparation of its report on management of Europe's environmental challenge.

Mr. Atkins: I am not aware of any request.

Water and Sewerage

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which standards authorities are recognised for certifying product specification in the water and sewerage industry.

Mr. Atkins: Water companies are private sector entities and may use certifying bodies of their choosing.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are made to consult public or environmental health organisations on new product specifications used in the water and sewerage industry.

Mr. Atkins: Subject to the requirements of the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989, water companies are free to use new product specifications without further consultation.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what recognised standards of thickness, strength, life expectancy and composition, pipework used to carry sewage is expected to conform.

Mr. Atkins: It is for the water companies to determine the factors affecting the performance of products which they use. They have the benefit of British standards where they exist and must ensure that they meet statutory and common law obligations relating to pollution.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when Marley Quantum plastic pipework was approved for use as sewer pipework to a European standard.

Mr. Atkins: I understand there is no European standard applicable to this type of pipework system.

Water Industry Certification Scheme

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which products have been approved since privatisation by the Water Industry Certification Scheme.

Mr. Atkins: The Water Industry Certification Scheme is a private company. I understand that it publishes details of its product approvals.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent the Water Industry Certification Scheme is financially independent from the privatised water companies.

Mr. Atkins: The Water Industry Certification Scheme is financed by the water companies, the Confederation of Scottish Local Authorities, the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland and the charges which it levies for its services.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest assessment of the contribution to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development target of reduced carbon dioxide emissions from road transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to her on 25 April 1994, Official Report, column 36.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much (a) carbon dioxide, (b) sulphur dioxide, (c) nitrogen oxides and (d) ash is emitted into the environment each year as a consequence of the generation of electricity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: In 1992, 51 million tonnes of carbon dioxide, 2·4 million tonnes of sulphur dioxide, 0·69 million tonnes of nitrogen oxides were emitted into the environment as a consequence of electricity generation. The trend in emissions for all these pollutants from this source is downwards. The figure for total particulate matter as authorised by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution was 16,390 tonnes.

"Index of Local Conditions"

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to publish the "Index of Local Conditions."

Sir George Young: The "Index of Local Conditions", giving information based upon data from the 1991 census and other data, is being published today. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House and sent to local authority associations and key voluntary organisations.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to consult on amending the building regulations to make provision for access by disabled people to dwellings.

Mr. Gummer: At my request, the Building Regulations Advisory Committee has been examining the desirability and practicability of extending access provisions for disabled people to dwellings in England and Wales. The present provisions for disabled people in the building regulations apply only to non-domestic buildings.

I have now received advice from the committee. As announced by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People on 6 May, we aim to consult on detailed proposals to apply to new dwellings. When issued for consultation, the proposals will be accompanied by a compliance cost assessment.

The committee is also examining whether the existing provisions for disabled people applying to non-domestic buildings should be improved. Any proposals here will also be subject to consultation in the normal way.

Director General of Water Services

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who will succeed Mr. Byatt as Director General of Water Services when his appointment ends on 31 July.

Mr. Gummer: The Secretary of State for Wales and I have decided to reappoint Mr. Byatt until 30 June 1996, to enable him to complete the implementation of the outcome of his periodic review of water charge limits to apply from 1 April 1995.

Water Boreholes

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to make water utilities liable for damage caused to property as a result of the sinking of water boreholes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 12 May 1994]: Water utilities already have the same liabilities as any other owner or occupier of land for any damage caused by them to neighbours in sinking boreholes on their land or on land to which the owner or occupiers allow them access. In addition, where they sink boreholes under powers conferred under the Water Industry Act 1991, they are liable to pay compensation for damage under schedule 11 —compulsory works powers—or schedule 6—powers to search for water—of that Act.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the methods whereby assessment is made of the risk of damage to local property resulting from the sinking of new water boreholes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 12 May 1994]: The National Rivers Authority must consider the implications of any new borehole which needs its licence or consent, or which is notified to it, in respect of water resources, the aquatic environment and other protected rights to water. Where planning permission is needed, the local planning authority will have to consider all material factors. Other aspects must be assessed by the person proposing to make the borehole, particularly in respect of his potential liabilities to compensate others for any damage that may be done.

Enterprise Zone, Tyneside

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, when he expects to announce the siting of the new enterprise zone on Tyneside as a result of substantial job losses at Swan Hunter; and if European Commission agreement for such an enterprise zone has been sought.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 12 May 1994]: No acceptable proposals for the siting of the proposed Tyneside enterprise zone have yet been made. The approval of the European Commission has not been sought.

EC Habitats Directive

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the impact of the special protection areas for wildlife contained in the draft regulations implementing the EC habitats directive.

Mr. Atkins: In October 1993 this Department issued a public consultation paper on proposals to implement the EC habitats directive. Over 140 responses were received and copies have been placed in the House Libraries. The responses have been taken into account in drafting implementation regulations which will be laid before the House shortly. The Government have not yet published their proposals for special areas of conservation to be designated under the terms of the directive.

TREASURY

Corporation Tax

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimated level of uncollected corporation tax, in figures and as a percentage, for each year since 1979, including 1993.

Mr. Dorrell: The amounts of corporation tax uncollected and consequently remitted or written off as irrecoverable since 1979 are as follows:

Year	Amount £ thousands	As a percentage of total corporation tax collected
1979	15,182	0·50
1980	16,214	0·49
1981	20,688	0·70

Year	Amount £ thousands	As a percentage of total corporation tax collected
1982	34,396	0·89
1983	40,912	0·11
1984	58,051	1·23
1985	75,342	1·27
1986	91,365	1·11
1987	92,830	0·93
1988	225,597	1·92
1989	151,368	1·05
1990	184,725	1·17
1991	320,929	2·09
1992	[1]about 440,000	3·77
1993	n/a	n/a

[1] From 1992 there has been a once and for all change in Revenue accounting practice. Under the new system the figures are £542,233,000 and 4·64 per cent.

Note: The figures for 1993 are not sufficiently complete to allow the necessary comparison to be made and consequently the information is not available in the form requested.

PAYE and National Insurance

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the latest estimated level of uncollected PAYE and national insurance contributions deducted but not paid over to the Revenue, in figures and as a percentage, for each year since 1979, including 1993;

(2) if he will list the amounts of PAYE and national insurance written off, in figures and as a percentage, for each year since 1979, including 1993.

Mr. Dorrell: The amounts of PAYE and national insurance contributions uncollected and consequently remitted or written off as uncollected are as follows:

Year	PAYE		National insurance contributions
	Amount in £ thousands	As a percentage of total collected	Classes 1 and 1A – amount in £ thousands	As a percentage of total classes 1 and 1A collected
1979	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a
1980	9,914	0·05	1,056	0·01
1981	11,432	0·08	1,158	0·01

[1]1992	[2]130,000	0·24	32,570	0·09
[3]1993	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a

[1] From 1992 there has been a once and for all change in Revenue accounting practice. Under the new system the figures are £381,172,000 and 0·71 per cent.

[2] Approximate.

[3] The figures for 1993 are not sufficiently complete to allow the necessary comparison to be made and consequently the information is not available in the form requested.

Schedule D

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimated level of uncollected schedule D tax, in figures and as a percentage, for each year since 1979, including 1993.

Mr. Dorrell: The amounts of schedule D tax uncollected and consequently remitted or written off as irrecoverable since 1979 are as follows:

Year	Amount in £ thousands	As a percentage of total Schedule D collected
1979	n.a.	n.a.
1980	33,081	0·79
1981	41,552	0·75
1982	52,763	0·84
1983	68,536	1·04

1991	383,566	3·17
1992	703,422	5·16
1993	n.a.	n.a.

Notes:

1. The figures for 1993 are not sufficiently complete to allow the necessary comparison to be made and consequently the information is not available in the form requested.
2. Separate figures for Schedule D are not available for 1979.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimated level of uncollected capital gains tax, in figures and as a percentage, for each year since 1979, including 1993.

Mr. Dorrell: The amounts of capital gains tax uncollected and consequently remitted or written off as irrecoverable since 1979 are as follows:

Year	Amount in £ thousands	As a percentage of total capital gains tax collected
1979	15,182	0·51
1980	3,591	0·71
1981	2,734	0·61
1982	4,868	0·78
1983	6,496	1·01
1984	5,998	0·84
1985	7,562	0·93
1986	10,064	0·99

PAYE Write-offs

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in how many cases PAYE was written off in each year since 1980.

Mr. Dorrell: The number of cases where PAYE was written off in each year since 1980 is as follows:

Year	Number of cases written off
1980	44,464
1981	7,019
1982	74,077
1983	36,871
1984	45,958
1985	48,361
1986	58,782
1987	69,079
1988	76,348
1989	76,853
1990	68,456
1991	93,341
1992	104,522

Figures for 1993 are not sufficiently complete to allow the necessary comparison to be made and consequently the information is not available in the form requested.

Identity Cards

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what studies his Departmnent has undertaken to ascertain the practicality of replacing self-employment certificates with national identity cards.

Mr. Dorrell: No studies have been undertaken by the Inland Revenue for this purpose.

Late Payment

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to announce the result of his consultation on the problems of late payment.

Mr. Portillo: The Government expect to announce their proposals shortly.

Building Industry (Fraud)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's estimate of the loss to the Exchequer from fraud in the building industry.

Mr. Dorrell: No reliable estimate can be made. But the construction industry deduction scheme provides a significant deterrent in controlling the extent of fraud in the building industry.

Local Government

Mr. Deva: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total contribution from the Exchequer towards the cost of local government services; and how much of that amount goes to (a) London boroughs, (b) other English local authorities and (c) Welsh local authorities.

Mr. Portillo: Exchequer contributions towards the cost of local government services take three forms: grants—including redistributed non-domestic rates—within aggregate external finance—AEF—which go to support services wholly or mainly financed out of local authorities' general resources—including the council tax; current grants outside AEF, which generally relate to services wholly or mainly financed by such grants; and capital grants.

It is estimated that some 16·7 per cent. of grants within AEF to English local authorities are paid to London boroughs. Current grants outside AEF and capital grants are distributed by a number of different Government Departments. Information on the division of these grants between London boroughs and other English local authorities is not available centrally—the total England figures are therefore given.

The figures are as follows:

(£ million, 1993-94)

	Grants within AEF	Other current grants	Capital grants
Total England	33,231	11,468	1,401
Welsh local authorities	2,339	572	224
TOTAL[1]	40,776	13,007	1,793

Notes:
[1] Includes authorities in Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Tax (Local Authorities)

Mr. Deva: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the proportional cost to the Exchequer of collecting that proportion of the tax take which is then given towards local authorities.

Mr. Portillo: Exchequer grants to local authorities are derived from general Government funds. They are not hypothecated from particular taxes. It is therefore not possible to hypothecate to them the costs of tax collection.

Non-domestic rates are collected by local authorities and redistributed to them through a central Exchequer pool. Authorities can offset amounts for the cost of collection against their contribution to the pool. For 1994-95, the allowance is £69·5 million—less than 0·7 per cent. of the expected rates yield for the year.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what basis he excludes the files of individual tax-payers from his market testing of the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Dorrell: There is no basis for excluding the files of individual taxpayers. If activities involving the processing, handling or holding of tax information were to be transferred to a private sector organisation, the Inland Revenue would remain responsible for continuing to ensure proper standards of privacy and confidentiality for all citizens. In addition to contractual safeguards, the contracting organisation and its employees would be subject, in the same way as Inland Revenue employees, to the criminal sanctions—a fine or imprisonment or both—provided by section 182 of the Finance Act 1989 for unauthorised disclosure of taxpayer personal information.

Confidentiality is not a bar to market testing; a lot of highly sensitive Government work is done by the private sector. But the Inland Revenue would need to be sure that an outside contractor could replicate existing security procedures and conditions.

Privatisation (Consultants)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of employing consultants in connection with privatisation programmes in which his departments have been engaged since 1980.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 4 May 1994]: The Treasury is the only one of the Chancellor's Departments to incur cost in employing consultants in connection with privatisation programmes since 1980.

With regard to the Treasury, I regret that information going back beyond 1991 can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The estimated cost of employing consultants in connection with privatisation programmes since 1991 is as follows:

1991-92	8,890,632
1992-93	1,428,793
1993-94	5,019,584

E-mail

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make arrangements for each Government Department and ministerial office to receive mail from hon. Members taking up matters on behalf of their constituents through E-mail.

The Prime Minister: I have no present plans to do so, but the Government are keeping the matter under review.

Public Relations and Advertising

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give details of the current level of Government expenditure, and for each of the previous five years, on public relations and advertising, covering all Departments of state; and if he will also show the sums spent through external agencies, both in public relations and advertising.

The Prime Minister: The information requested is not held centrally for all Government Departments.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister when he last met the President of Cyprus; and what issues were discussed.

The Prime Minister: I last met President Clerides during the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in Cyprus in October 1993. We discussed United Nations efforts to resolve the Cyprus problem.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had with other members of the United Nations Security Council about the statement by Edwin Bollier and Ulrich Lumpert, Swiss manufacturers of timing devices, about the circumstances of the Pan Am 103 disaster over Lockerbie and the policy of sanctions against Libya.

The Prime Minister: The exchange of information with the authorities of other Governments involved in the Lockerbie investigation is a matter for my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate. He has made it clear that he cannot comment on the details of the available evidence while criminal proceedings are pending.

We have regular discussions with the other members of the Security Council about Libya. They are clearly of the view that Libya has not complied with Security Council resolutions 731, 748 and 883.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 17 May.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 17 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Malaysia

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister for how long his predecessor visited Malaysia on 6 August 1988; who she met during her visit and by whom she was accompanied during her meetings; what subjects were discussed during the meetings; and on what date it was decided that she should visit Malaysia on 6 August 1988.

The Prime Minister: My predecessor decided in June 1988 to visit Malaysia in August on her return from Australia. During a two hour stop-over in Kuala Lumpur on 6 August, she met the Malaysian Prime Minister, who was accompanied by his Foreign Minister, the Secretary-General of the Foreign Ministry and two other officials. The British high commissioner and the Prime Minister's foreign affairs private secretary were also present. A wide range of subjects was discussed, including aid, air services, Cambodia, defence sales, and arrangements for the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in Malaysia in 1989.

SCOTLAND

Prisoners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by Her Majesty's prison and remand home/centre for the latest date he has figures available, the number of inmates whose place of residence is South Yorkshire; and what were the figures (a) 12 months and (b) 24 months ago.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Scottish Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 17 May 1994:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of inmates in Scottish penal establishments whose place of residence is South Yorkshire for the latest date available and the figures for 12 months and 24 months ago.

I regret that the information requested is not held centrally.

Hospital Contracts

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) for which hospital contracts in Scotland Scottish Office advice has been given that they lie outside the scope of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations; and for which contracts advice has been given that they fall within the scope of TUPE;

(2) what advice was given by the national health service management executive about the applicability of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to contracts for domestic and portering services at Glasgow Royal infirmary, the Royal maternity hospital and Yorkhill hospital.

Mr. Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 16 May, Official Report, column 365.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many parliamentary questions, in the period November 1992 to March 1993, were answered with the response that the information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost; how many were referred on to an agency chief executive; and, in each case, what percentage of the total number of questions asked this constituted.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is as follows:

Police Sick Leave

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by sex, and by year for the last 10 years, the average number of police officer days lost for reasons of sickness in each police authority.

College Boards

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the members of all further education college boards in Scotland and their relevant qualifications for this position.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have placed in the Library of the House the information held by my Department on the membership of boards of management of further education colleges in Scotland. Members of the boards of incorporated colleges are appointed in accordance with criteria set out in schedule 2 of the Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Act 1992. Schedule 6 of the Act provided that, with the exception of the staff and student representatives, the initial appointments to the boards were made by the Secretary of State. Subsequent appointments are for the boards themselves.

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines the Government give to hospital trusts about openness and accountability.

Mr. Stewart: My noble and learned friend the Minister of State last month issued codes of conduct and accountability covering issues such as openness and accountability to all members of health boards and NHS trusts. Each board has been asked to adopt these codes at its next formal meeting. For new members, acceptance of the codes will be a condition of appointment. Arrangements have been made for copies of the codes to be available in the Library of the House.

Ambulance Service

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the advantages for the Scottish ambulance service of becoming a trust and the disadvantages of remaining as it is at present.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 May 1994]: In signifying an interest in trust status the Scottish ambulance service has indicated that this will allow it to make much faster progress towards the achievement of its four main objectives which are:

(a) improving the quality of service to its patients;
(b) improving relationships with health boards and NHS trusts as purchasers of ambulance services;
(c) improving the motivation and ability of its staff to deliver better services;
(d) achieving better value for money.

These advantages will be explained in more detail in the Scottish ambulance service trust application which is to be issued for public consultation on 18 May and a copy will be sent to the hon. Member.

Prison Visiting Committees

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes are proposed to the composition of prison visiting committees; which individuals and organisations were consulted before such changes were proposed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 May 1994]: Under The Prison (Scotland) Rules 1952, as amended, appointments to prison visiting committees are made by every local authority in whose area prisoners might have their homes. As a result some committees are extremely large—the Barlinnie visiting committee for example has 35 members—and members have to travel long distances. As currently drafted, under the new Prisons and Young Offenders Institutions (Scotland) Rules only those local authorities within which the prisons lie would appoint members to visiting committees. The position would then be as set out in table 1.

In the new draft rules it is also proposed that half the membership of visiting committees should come from outwith the elected membership of the appointing authorities. It would therefore be open to the latter to appoint whoever they considered appropriate. These proposals were the subject of consultation last September, when views were sought from the organisations and individuals listed in table 2.

No firm view has yet been taken on the final shape of the new rules. We are considering carefully the representations made during the formal consultation process. Thereafter the new rules will be laid before this House.

Manpower Services Commission

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps his Department has taken to constitute a voluntary early retirement scheme applicable to former Manpower Services Commission staff seconded to the local enterprise companies or previously seconded; and what undertakings have been sought in relation to applicants from among such secondees that they were taking early retirement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 May 1994]: On the establishment of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise former Department of Employment staff in Scotland were seconded to those bodies—rather than to the local enterprise companies—and were entitled to exercise a right to take up an offer of employment from the body in question until the termination of their secondment on 31 March 1994.

Former Department of Employment staff who accepted an offer of employment from Scottish Enterprise or Highlands and Islands Enterprise became subject to the terms and conditions of service of these bodies, which are subject to approval by my right hon. Friend. A number of former Department of Employment secondees subsequently accepted voluntary severance or early retirement under those terms and conditions as part of a general programme of staff reduction within Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. Detailed arrangements relating to voluntary severance and early retirement are an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise but the terms of these arrangements did not include any conditions applicable solely to former Department of Employment secondees.

Department of Employment secondees remained eligible, until they took up an offer of employment, for any applicable early retirement schemes offered by that Department; the detailed arrangements are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Fishing

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether it is the practice of his officials to prohibit the use of nets between 70 and 90mm in the United Kingdom nephrops fishery where the square mesh panel is fitted forward of any flapper as an alternative to placing it three flapper lengths to the rear of the flapper.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 12 May 1994]: Article 4(1) and (2) of the Sea Fish (Specified Sea Areas) (Regulation of Nets and Other Fishing Gear)(Variation) Order 1991, as amended, sets out the requirements for the use of square mesh panels in nets of between 70-90mm mesh size used for nephrops fishing in ICES area IV (north Sea).

Guidance to Fishery Officers was issued in December 1993 to confirm that square mesh panels should be sited either in the cod-end or in any extension piece, or immediately in front of any cod-end or any extension piece, as required by article 4(1)(c). Article 4(1)(f) sets out additional requirements in relation to any flappers that may be used, and allows the panel to be placed forward of any flapper.

Office Space, Edinburgh

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made as to the availability of quality, modern, open-plan office space in the Edinburgh area; and what plans he has to address any shortfall.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 12 May 1994]: My right hon. Friend has made no such assessment. Data may be available, of course, from private sector interests and publications and other sources. Local enterprise companies generally have a responsibility to work with the market to ensure that business development is not constrained by a lack of suitable accommodation. I understand that Lothian and Edinburgh Enterprise Limited conducted a major audit of the Lothian property market last winter.

The hon. Member may therefore wish to approach the chairman of Lothian and Edinburgh Enterprise Limited to seek further information about the audit and about its present activities in this area.

Strathclyde Regional Council

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the value of central (a) administrative, (b) financial, (c) legal, (d) personnel and (e) information technology services provided to each of the (i) police, (ii) fire, (iii) water and (iv) sewerage departments by Strathclyde regional council in the latest available financial year.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 May 1994]: The information requested is not held centrally.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Development Assistance

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the unweighted average of official development assistance of (a) EC countries and (b) Development Assistance Committee countries, as a proportion of gross national product in (i) 1992 and (ii) 1993; how much the United Kingdom spent by the same measure; and by how much the United Kingdom would have needed to increase its assistance in cash terms in those years to have reached (1) EC and (2) DAC average expenditure.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Figures for official development assistance are not yet available for 1993. In 1992, the unweighted average official development assistance as a proportion of gross national product for EC countries and DAC countries was 0·45 per cent. and 0·48 per cent. respectively—the weighted averages are 0·44 per cent. and 0·33 per cent. respectively.

The United Kingdom official development assistance as a proportion of gross national product in 1992 was 0·31 per cent. In cash terms, the United Kingdom would have needed to increase its assistance by £844 million and £1,012 million to have reached the unweighted average expenditure levels for EC countries and DAC countries respectively.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of British aid was spent on (a) primary health care, (b) nutrition, (c) basic education, (d) family planning and (e) safe water and sanitation in (i) 1992 and (ii) 1993; and how much in cash terms would need to have been spent in each year in order to increase the amount spent on those basic needs to 20 per cent. of official development assistance.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Figures for official development assistance are not yet available for 1993. In 1992, the specified sectors as a proportion of the United Kingdom's bilateral official development assistance that can be allocated to a sector was:

	Per cent.
Primary health care	4·7
Nutrition	0·06
Education	20·4
Family planning	0·4
Safe water/sanitation	2·9
Total	28·0

Our bilateral aid programme also includes a large amount of assistance which cannot be allocated by sector, such as debt relief, economic reform programmes and humanitarian assistance, but which also helps the poorest.

Least Developed Countries (Aid)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much British aid was spent in the least developed countries in (a) 1992 and (b) 1993; how much this was as a proportion of gross national product; and by how much British official development assistance to the least developed countries would have needed to increase in cash terms in those years in order to meet the level recommended by the 1990 United Nations programme of action for the least developed countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Figures for official development assistance for 1993 are not yet available. In 1992, the United Kingdom gave £610·7 million to the least developed countries. This amounted to 0·10 per cent. of gross national product. To meet the 1990 United Nations programme of action for the least developed countries target, an increase of £278 million would have been needed. It should be noted however that the United Nations' category of least developed countries excludes states such as India and Pakistan, which are as poor as many least developed countries and are major recipients of United Kingdom aid.

Sub-Saharan Africa

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of its official development assistance the United Kingdom spent in sub-Saharan Africa in 1992 and 1993; and what was the change in percentage terms between those years, giving the figures for (a) bilateral aid, (b) multilateral aid and (c) in total.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Figures for official development assistance are not yet available for 1993. In 1992, the United Kingdom gave 55·5 per cent. of its total official development assistance to sub-Saharan Africa. This represented a 4·8 per cent. increase over the 1991 figure, with bilateral assistance decreasing by 6 per cent. and multilateral assistance increasing by 13 per cent.

Human Needs

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the recommendations of the United Nations Development Programme on the proportion of developing countries' budgets which should be devoted directly to meeting the priority human needs of their people and the proportion of which international aid for development should directly support those needs.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We recognise the importance of addressing priority human needs, but do not consider it appropriate to prescribe proportional targets for expenditure on a global basis. The imposition of such targets on to the budgets of developing countries can restrict their capacity to prioritise expenditure to cope with their particular circumstances.

The proportion of the British aid budget allocable by sector to priority human needs is already significant. In the financial year 1992-93, about 31 per cent.—£180 million—of allocable bilateral aid went to the health, education, and water sectors.

Grameen Bank, Bangladesh

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will encourage third-world Governments and institutions in the establishment of banks similar to the Grameen bank in Bangladesh;

(2) if he will consider giving financial assistance to the Grameen bank in Bangladesh; and what assessment he has made of the work of the Grameen bank.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Overseas Development Administration endorses the objectives of the Grameen bank in its work with the poor in Bangladesh. We have not been asked for financial support. If requested, help to establish similar credit institutions in other countries would be candidates for consideration from our bilateral aid programme on a case-by-case basis.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made for the proportion of overseas aid which actually goes to the poor of the countries that it is intended to help.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1992-93, 80 per cent. of the British bilateral aid allocatable by income group went to the poorest countries in the world. All of our aid effort is intended, either directly or indirectly, to help poor people in the recipient countries.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the extent to which aid is spent by Governments on projects and bureaucracy rather than on people in need.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The overall purpose of the aid programme is to promote sustainable economic and social development in other countries and the welfare of their people. The Government finance a range of projects and programmes in support of this. Some are carried out through non-governmental organisations and the private sector. Many are carried out through Governments. In all cases, we assess the likely effectiveness of the institutions concerned in advance of the project and monitor this during the project's execution.

EDUCATION

School Tests

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the respective duties and responsibilities of (a) teachers, (b) heads, (c) governors and (d) local education authorities to ensure testing of the national curriculum at key stage 3 in the current year; and what are the penalties in each case for failure to comply.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is the duty of local education authorities and governing bodies to exercise their functions with a view to securing, and the duty of the head teacher to secure, the implementation of all aspects of the national curriculum including the key stage 3 tests. Under their contracts of employment, classroom teachers are required to carry out duties under the direction of the head teacher. Head teachers are also under a contractual duty to carry out their statutory obligations.

If a teacher or head teacher is in breach of contract of employment it falls to his or her employer to consider what action to take. The employer would decide what, if any, disciplinary action is called for, except in an LEA-maintained school with a delegated budget, where it would be the responsibility of the governing body. If an LEA or governing body acts unreasonably or fails to carry out one of its duties then the Secretary of State has the power to issue a direction to that governing body or LEA.

Teacher Training Agency

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what arrangements he has made for setting up the new teacher training agency.

Mr. Patten: The Government intend, subject to the passage of the Education Bill currently before Parliament, to establish a new funding agency in England to administer all central funds for initial teacher training. Parliamentary approval for expenditure associated with this new service in 1994-95 will be sought in a revised estimate for the higher and further education vote (class X, vote 2). Pending that approval, urgent and essential preparatory expenditure estimated at £74,000 will be met by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund.

Student Grants

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will announce the post graduate bursary and studentship rates payable by his Department for the academic year 1994-95.

Mr. Boswell: The main maintenance rates under the Department's own postgraduate awards scheme for certain professional and vocational courses in the academic year 1994-95 will be as follows, with 1993-94 rates shown in brackets:

	1994-95 £	1993-94 £
Bursaries
London	3,295	(3,170)
Elsewhere	2,600	(2,500)
Parental home	1,965	(1,890)
Studentships
London	5,555	(5,340)
Elsewhere	4,415	(4,245)
Parental home	3,255	(3,130)

These represent increases of 4 per cent. on the current year's rates. The relevant supplementary allowances will be increased broadly in line.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

English Heritage

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations have been received from the London boroughs by (a) English Heritage and (b) his Department in respect of English Heritage's proposal to transfer responsibility for negotiation with owners and developers of listed buildings to them.

Mr. Brooke: My Department has no record of direct representations on this issue since I agreed last year to English Heritage's negotiating directly with individual boroughs, with a view to devolving to them the responsibility for determining applications for listed building consent for minor alterations and extensions to grade II listed buildings under "flexible authorisation". I refer to the answer given to my right hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir John Wheeler) on 23 April 1993 at columns 228-2[illegible].

Since then, English Heritage has signed agreements with three of the boroughs where such applications are most frequent—Bexley, Kensington and Chelsea, and Wandsworth. Agreements with the City of London, the City of Westminster and Kingston-upon-Thames are imminent. Discussions are in progress with a number of other boroughs and it is expected that further agreements will be signed over the next year. In addition to devolution of this casework the agreements provide, where appropriate, a measure of financial support for conserva tion staff posts and training. All the remaining boroughs have indicated a willingness to discuss with English Heritage the handling of conservation work and the support that English Heritage could give them.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the ratio of professional and technical staff to managers and administrators at English Heritage in (a) 1983, (b) 1990 and (c) the latest available date.

Mr. Brooke: English Heritage was established in 1984. The ratios of professional and technical staff to managers and administrators are as follows:

	Professional/ Technical	Managers/ Administration
1984	45	55
1990	48	52
1994	47	53

These ratios exclude custodial and industrial staff.

Millennium Commission

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 5 May, Official Report, column 608, if he will give a breakdown of the estimated £670,000 administration costs of the Millennium Commission which remains after subtracting the elements for salary and staff costs, and for publicity.

Mr. Brooke: The estimated £670,000 administration costs of the Millennium Commission which is expected to remain after subtracting the elements for salary and staff costs and for publicity, is expected to break down as follows:

Contracted-out services	159,000
Consultants, including project appraisal	240,000
Accommodation and fitting out costs	244,000
Utilities	14,000
Office services	13,000

Radio Reception, Llanbrynmair

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make it his policy to improve FM radio reception in Llanbrynmair; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: It is for the broadcasters to determine the engineering priorities aimed at extending or improving reception of programmes to specific areas.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Child Care

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if the results of the survey on child care in the Parliamentary Estate will be made public.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: The Committee has now reported its conclusions in respect of the provision of child care to the House of Commons Commission. That part of the Committee's proceedings which contain the principal deliberations on this issue have now been published in HC 374-i to ix. The Committee has decided not to publish the results of the survey.

HEALTH

Children (Accidents and Deaths)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many notifications of (a) child deaths and (b) incidents of serious harm to children have been received by the Department of Health under the terms of part 8 of "Working Together" each year since the implementation of the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Bowis: The Department does not hold central information in the form requested. The table shows the number of child deaths reported to the Department since 1 April 1991.

Year ending 31 March	[1]Number reported
1992	[2]115
1993	116
1994	112

[1] Not all deaths are due to abuse and subject to Review under part 8 of Working Together. Figures cover all deaths of children looked after by a local authority or accommodated at a childrens home (eg: this would include children whose deaths were due to natural causes).

[2] Figure includes 58 deaths recorded in the period up to 13 October 1991 prior to the implementation of the Children Act 1989.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 20 April, Official Report, column 541, regarding trusts which fail to meet their capital return targets, what action her Department has at its disposal when trusts so fail; and how often action has been taken to date.

Mr. Sackville: The regional offices of the national health service executive monitor the financial performance of trusts on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. Where a trust fails to meet one or more of its financial duties by a material amount it will be required to produce a recovery plan which will then be monitored closely by the regional office. Any trust which exceeds its authorised external financing limit has its limit for the following year reduced by the amount of the excess.

In some circumstances failure to meet financial duties on a recurrent basis may indicate a trust is no longer financially viable. In those circumstances the NHS executive will investigate whether the trust should be merged with another, or exceptionally dissolved, if there is no longer any demand for its services.

Appropriate action as above has been taken in each case of material failure to meet a financial duty.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 20 April, Official Report, column 541, how many trusts that (a) failed to meet and (b) succeeded in meeting their financial targets (i) borrowed finance and (ii) had loans guaranteed by her Department; and what sums of money were involved.

Mr. Sackville: All the borrowing detailed as follows was within agreed limits whether or not the trust met its financial duties. Trusts negotiate overdraft facilities with their bankers and the Department issues guarantees in support of these arrangements. Information is not available centrally about the extent to which these facilities were taken up during the year. Information for 1993-94 will not be available until the annual accounts of trusts are audited.

1991-92 (57 trusts established)

Six of the trusts which failed to achieve one or more of their financial targets in 1991-92 received loans from the Department. The amount involved was £17,336,000 of which £3,100,000 was short-term borrowing repaid in year.

Thirteen of the trusts meeting their financial targets in 1991-92 received loans from the Department. The amount involved was £80,567,000 of which £30,150,000 was short-term borrowing repaid in year.

Seven of the trusts which failed to meet one or more of their financial targets in 1991-92 were issued with overdraft guarantees by the Department. The amount involved was £3,125,000.

Seven of the trusts meeting their financial duties in 1991-92 were issued with overdraft guarantees by the Department. The amount involved was £2,550,000.

1992-93 (156 trusts established)

Thirty-eight trusts which failed to meet one or more of their financial targets in 1992-93 received loans from the Department. The amount involved was £257,875,972 of which £66,663,731 was short-term borrowing repaid in year.

Thirty-three trusts which met their financial targets in 1992-93 took loans from the Department. The amount involved was £186,310,425 of which £64,751,000 was short-term borrowing repaid in year.

Twenty-one trusts which failed to meet one or more of their financial targets in 1992-93 were issued with overdraft guarantees by the Department. The amount involved was £7,135,000.

Twenty-four trusts which met their financial targets in 1992-93 were issued with overdraft guarantees by the Department. The amount involved was £11,425,000.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those English NHS trusts which in 1992-93 failed to achieve a 6 per cent. return on capital in (a) percentage terms and (b) cash terms.

Mr. Sackville [pursuant to his reply 15 March 1994 columns 560-61]: I regret that there were errors in my previous reply.

The amounts of return on capital employed for Broadgreen hospital and St. Helen's and Knowsley national health service trusts should read—£2,145,000 and £4,268,000 respectively. The percentages were however correct.

Staff Contracts

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is now the number of personnel working within the national health service who are (a) on short-term contracts and (b) on temporary contracts; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available centrally.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if her Department has, or intends to develop, a preventive strategy which concentrates on eliminating the range of factors and circumstances which can give rise to abuse or neglect of children; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The Government attach a high priority to this problem and seeks to tackle it through guidance, measures designed to promote training in this field and through the Children Act 1989.

In October 1991, to coincide with the implementation of the Children Act, the Home Department, the Department of Health, the Department for Education and the Welsh Office published a revised edition of "Working Together under the Children Act 1989—a guide to arrangements for inter-agency co-operation for the protection of children from abuse". The guide incorporates lessons learned in individual cases which have caused public and professional concern in recent years. Copies of the guide are available in the Library.

Local authorities have a duty to provide services to prevent children in their area suffering ill treatment or neglect, which forms part of a general duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of children in need.

Cosmetic Surgery

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to regulate private cosmetic surgery clinics.

Mr. Sackville: Private cosmetic surgery clinics are covered by the Registered Homes Act 1984. There are no plans to extend regulation.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what training is required by those who wish to practise as cosmetic surgeons.

Mr. Sackville: There is no separate speciality of comsetic surgery. Surgeons in plastic surgery in the national health service are required to undergo basic and higher specialist training in posts, and to standards, approved by the Joint Committee on Higher Surgical Training of the Royal Colleges of Surgeons. The required training for those who wish to practise plastic surgery in the independent sector is a matter for the employer and the health insurers.

Christopher Clunis

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the performance management system for the mental health services works; and to what extent the deficiencies in the care and treatment of Christopher Clunis, described in the Ritchie report, have been remedied.

Mr. Bowis: The ten-point plan, which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced last August, outlined a programme of work to improve the care of mentally ill people in the community. The plan includes the introduction of supervision registers, the issuing of new guidance on discharge and new legislation to introduce a supervised discharge for a small number of patients.

The National Health Service Executive is taking action to strengthen its monitoring of community care for severely mentally ill people in line with one of the key recommendations of the Ritchie report. The aim is to ensure that health authorities systematically deliver the care programme approach and other policy commitments in their contracts with service providers and that they work effectively with local authorities and other agencies. A local audit tool for the care programme approach is being produced to provide a clear basis against which health authorities can review local arrangements with their providers and other agencies involved and identify areas for improvement. The NHS executive will follow this up with a national sample audit to ensure that the arrangements are working satisfactorily.

The mental health task force is working with health authorities and other agencies in London to review the arrangements for the management of severely mentally ill people in the community and is helping authorities to develop action plans to address problems which are identified.

Dental Services and Sight Tests (NHS Staff)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will publish a list of those regional health authorities, district health authorities, family health services authorities, or other NHS bodies, which operate schemes for reimbursing charges incurred by their employees for NHS dental examinations or sight tests;

(2) what guidance has been issued by her Department or the NHS executive to NHS authorities regarding the operation of schemes for reimbursing charges incurred by their employees for NHS dental examinations or sight tests; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on national health service bodies who offer such reimbursement schemes is not available centrally. No guidance has been issued to national health service employers about these schemes.

The decision on whether to introduce a scheme is a matter for each national health service employer.

Counselling

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 10 May, Official Report, column 84, what studies she has instituted to ascertain the cost and benefits to the NHS of introducing payments for counselling.

Mr. Bowis: Research evidence on the cost effectiveness of counselling and psychotherapy services is being examined as part of a current departmental review of strategic policy on psychotherapy services.

Mental Health

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what way the National Health Service Executive takes account of the views of the carers of those for whom mental health services are provided.

Mr. Bowis: The National Health Service Executive is committed to involving both users and carers. It is involved in the NHS executive's mental health task force London project. The mental health task force has also commissioned the National Schizophrenia Fellowship to undertake a survey on the experiences and needs of people caring for someone with mental illness.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide further information about the tool kit of measures relating to performance management of mental health services reported in evidence to the House of Commons Health Committee in December 1993, by the director of the mental health task force.

Mr. Bowis: The mental health task force has initiated an annual survey, now in its second year, of progress on reprovision of old-style long-stay services. This information is now being combined with other information on the full range of mental health services provided by health and social services to enable comparisons to be made at health authority level across England. This analysis will be available to support performance management in the national health service executive regional offices and in purchasing authorities.

Guidance to purchasers on specifying a service for severely mentally ill people is also in preparation. A range of other materials highlighting best practice have been or are about to be published, including a series of videos on innovative service provision and publications on releasing fixed costs and on approaches to reproviding services across three regions.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will now establish a permanent inter departmental advisory group on mental health; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: We are considering the Health Select Committee's recommendation on this and will respond to the Committee shortly.

Health Services, Sunderland

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of patients out of the total annual patient population were discharged from each of the Sunderland hospitals in each year since 1990 to (a) residential homes and (b) residential nursing homes.

Mr. Bowis: This is a matter for the Sunderland district health authority, to whom I refer the hon. Member.

NHS Estate

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for each year since 1987, how much the NHS has paid to district valuation officers for valuation work on NHS land and property assets which are earmarked for disposal.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities contract individually with the district valuation office for required services. The total of amounts paid are not available centrally.

The valuation office has recently centralised its own records enabling it to set out the total paid by the national health service for services—in England—and has provided the following figures. They include for all services, not just for work in respect of disposals. Information for prior years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

1991-92	1,131,432
1992-93	831,625
1993-94	1,696,692

Obsessive Compulsive Disorder

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS hospitals or community health centres have established units for the treatment of obsessive compulsive disorder.

Mr. Bowis: Treatment of those suffering from obsessive compulsive disorder is provided within general mental health services which are available in every district.

Hearing Apparatus (Charges)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce charges for people with hearing difficulties in respect of hearing apparatus, aids, repairs and batteries; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: None.

Diethylstilbestrol

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the firms which are or have been involved in the manufacture of diethylstilbestrol for distribution in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sackville: Firms that currently hold marketing authorisations for the drug diethylstilbestrol are Approved Prescription Services, A. Nelson and Co. Ltd. and Norgine Ltd.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the percentage uptake of regular diethylstilbestrol examinations by those women whose mothers received it during pregnancy in each local health authority in England and Wales;

(2) what guidelines her Department has issued regarding the frequency of diethylstilbestrol examinations for women whose mothers were prescribed it during pregnancy.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has issued no guidelines on regular diothylstilbestrol examinations for women whose mothers were prescribed it during pregnancy.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health under which names diethylstilbestrol is or has been marketed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sackville: Diethylstilbestrol has been marketed under the following brand names: Stilboestrol, Stilboestrol BP, Tampovagan Stilboestrol and Lactic Acid Pessary, Menopax, Sedestran, Merven and Pabestrol.

Hormonal Transplacental Carcinogenesis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department has undertaken or commissioned on hormonal transplacental carcinogenesis in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Nutritional Therapy

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations she has received concerning the inclusion of nutritional therapy in the national health service; what was the nature of these representations; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Representations have been received from an organisation called the Society for the Promotion of Nutritional Therapy.

The availability of nutritional therapy within the national health service will depend—as with orthodox medicine—on the clinical judgment of the responsible clinician in respect of individual patients and on decisions taken locally by district health authorities, general practitioner fundholders and family health services authorities on how they should best use their funds to meet the health needs of the local population.

Transgenic Pigs

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her Department's position on the use of transgenic pigs for human transplant operations.

Mr. Sackville: The modification of animal organs for transplantation into human beings has not yet been developed. Procedures of this kind would not be practised in the United Kingdom without the approval of the medical profession and with consideration of the ethical issues involved. Any clinical or medical research involving national health service patients would have to be referred to the appropriate local research ethics committee.

Disablement Grants

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment she has made of the operation of the provisions of the Children Act 1989 limiting disablement facilities grants to people aged 18 years or over; what is the reason for these provisions; and what representations she has received for (a) Coventry and (b) elsewhere on the subject;

(2) what assessment she has made of trends in the number of people in Coventry who are eligible to receive disablement grants; and how many people in Coventry are excluded for eligibility for the grant by the changes made in the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 16 May at columns 323-24. The number of people in Coventry eligible for disablement facilities grants is not available centrally.

Tobacco-related Deaths

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the total number of tobacco-related deaths in each year since 1983-84.

Mr. Sackville: The only statistics available are for 1988, published in the Health Education Authority's report "The Smoking Epidemic", copies of which are available in the Library. It was then estimated that smoking-related diseases account for some 110,000 deaths a year in the United Kingdom.

Sight Tests

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many national health service sight tests paid for by the family health service authorities took place in 1993-94 in each regional health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: The figures for 1993-94 are not yet available.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list, by region, the allocation for general practitioner fundholding for prescribing in (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92, (c) 1992-93 and (d) 1993-94.

Dr. Mawhinney: General practitioner fundholding commenced in April 1991; prescribing allocations for the years since then are shown in the table. Fundholding practices may vire between the prescribing elements of their budgets and those for staff costs and hospital and community health services.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of general practitioner non-fundholding practices in each region; what percentage of regional total of general practitioner practices this represents; and what percentage of the regional population they serve.

Dr. Mawhinney: The table gives the requested information as at 1 October 1993 when 75 per cent. of the population was served by non-fundholding general practitioners. On 1 April 1994 this was reduced to 65 per cent. as a further 805 practices joined the fundholding scheme.

Waiting List Initiative

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring she has undertaken regarding schemes financed by the additional funds for the waiting list initiative announced on 17 February; and if she will place the data obtained in the Library.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 19 April 1994]: When the additional funding was allocated regional health authorities were asked to record the resulting activity. Initial returns show that at least 38,000 patients have benefited from earlier treatment as a result of the Government's initiative.

Health Visitors and Nurses

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) health visitors, (b) district nurses, (c) community psychiatric nurses and (d) school nurses were employed in the NHS for each of the last five years, broken down by regional health authority and expressed as whole-time equivalents.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 13 May 1994]: The information available will be placed in the Library. The information shows an overall increase of 3·7 per cent. between 1988 to 1992. The number of practice nurses has increased by 162·1 per cent. from 3,480 in 1988 to 9,120 in 1992. This gives an overall increase of 22·7 per cent. for community nursing staff.

WALES

Dyslexia

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his current policies to assist (a) adults and (b) children of school age who suffer dyslexia; and what new measures he plans.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Further Education Funding Council for Wales has responsibility for ensuring that adequate arrangements are in place to meet the needs of adult students with learning difficulties and/or disabilities.

Since 1 April 1993 the funding council may fund courses which teach independent living and communication skills to adults who have learning difficulties so as to prepare them for vocational or academic courses; courses which prepare them for entry to higher education courses; courses for basic literacy in English; or courses for proficiency or literacy in Welsh. The council supported over 2,100 students with learning difficulties and/or disabilities in 1993-94, including those with dyslexia.

It is the responsibility of local education authorities and schools to make appropriate provision for children with special educational needs, including dyslexia. The code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs, which has been approved by Parliament, and which comes into effect in September 1994, gives guidance to help LEAs and schools in those responsibilities. From that date also school governing bodies have the duty of preparing and publishing their policies for children with special educational needs, including those with dyslexia.

Under the grants for education support and training programme for 1994-95, the Welsh Office has made grant available to LEAs specifically for training of teachers of children with dyslexia in addition to more general training in special educational needs. The 1995-96 programme is currently under consideration.

Pollution Control

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many copies of the guide on the implementation of integrated pollution control, prepared with the Department of the Environment, have been distributed in Wales; to whom it has been made available; and at what cost.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The guide is a priced document at £5 a copy, available from Her Majesty's Stationery Office, its accredited agents and through certain booksellers. Around 2,700 copies have been sold to date, but no separate record exists as to the number of purchasers in Wales or their identity.

Prescriptions

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many prescriptions are dispensed in any one year in Wales; and what is the number receiving exemptions from charges.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell) on 10 May, c. 103.

Llangollen

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has had from individuals and organisations relating to the inclusion of Llangollen in a new unitary authority of Wrexham; how many were in favour of this development; and what dates they were received in his office.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend and I have received 19 representations about the implications of local government reorganisation for the community of Llangollen. The details are as follows:

Buckley Link Road

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will grant extra funds to Clwyd county council to enable it to build the Buckley town link road.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No. Under arrangements agreed with local authorities, road schemes costing less than £5 million are financed from unhypothecated resources.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure that the valuation of homes blighted by the proposed Buckley-Clwyd link road is satisfactory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The scheme is the responsibility of Clwyd county council, which is obliged to pay the open market value of the homes required. Where the value is disputed home owners can refer the issue to the Lands Tribunal, an independent expert body appointed to deal with such disputes.

Homes (Road Schemes)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines are used by those who value homes due to be demolished or which are blighted as a consequence of road schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office employs the district valuer to negotiate the appropriate level of compensation which includes the open market value of the property being acquired under blight or compulsory purchase. In establishing the market value the district valuer will take into account comparable transactions in the locality and disregard any depreciating effect of the road proposals.

Housing

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many council houses there were in each district council area and in Wales as a whole in each year since 1988-89, indicating the percentage change in each case between 1988-89 and the latest available year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The numbers of local authority dwellings in each district council area in each year since 1989-90 are given in the following table.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many homes were provided by housing associations (a) for rent, (b) for sale and (c) in total in each year since 1989-90 for (i) each district council and (ii) Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The following tables show the number of homes provided by housing associations and the number of these homes which were intended for rent and for sale in each year since 1989-90.

Sheep Farming

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the French Government's authorisation of an aid package to French sheep farmers, with regard to this action's effect on sheep farmers in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: The announcement of the French support for its sheepmeat industry was made comparatively recently and we do not, therefore, have sufficient details to be able to assess its impact on Welsh sheep farmers. However, under articles 92 and 93 of the treaty of Rome, national aid schemes are strictly controlled in order to prevent unfair competition. Member states must obtain the prior approval of the Commission for any new state aids or modification to existing aids. The Commission has the authority to require the abolition or amendment of any scheme including the repayment of any aid paid illegally.

We are making inquiries of the Commission to determine the status of this particular aid scheme.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food about sheep scab; and what plans he has to make sheep scab a fully notifiable disease.

Mr. Redwood: Sheep scab is a disease which can be controlled readily by individual farmers, who are well aware of the preventive measures and procedures needed to deal with it. A recent official surveillance programme at markets and sales has indicated that the number of affected sheep has increased from the levels recorded before deregulation. Sheep scab can lead to serious welfare problems and has commercial implications for farmers and the leather industry. The Government therefore propose to carry out a publicity campaign to encourage farmers to treat their sheep. To ensure that farmers take their welfare responsibilities seriously, sheep suffering from scab will be required to be removed from markets for treatment and the vendor may be prosecuted.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 13 April, Official Report, column 48, how many representations of the 13 he received in favour of the inclusion of Wick, St. Bride's Major and Ewenny in the proposed Vale of Glamorgan unitary authority were made by members of the public.

Mr. Redwood: Of the 13 representations I received since the publication of the White Paper in favour of the inclusion of Wick, St. Bride's Major and Ewenny in the proposed Vale of Glamorgan unitary authority, six were from members of the public.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the representations he has received (a) in favour of and (b) in opposition to the inclusion of Llanelly in the proposed new unitary authority of Powys since publication of his White Paper, "Local Government in Wales: A Charter for the Future";

(2) if he will list the representations he received prior to his White Paper, "Local Government in Wales: a Charter for the Future", and the dates he received them, which were opposed to the inclusion of Wick, St. Bride's Major and Ewenny in the proposed unitary authority of the Vale of Glamorgan.

Mr. Redwood: I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many parliamentary questions, in the period November 1992 to March 1993, were answered with the response that the information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost; how many were referred to an agency chief executive; and, in each case, what percentage of the total number of questions asked this constituted.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Seven parliamentary questions were answered during the period concerned using the answer in question. This represents 0·5 per cent. of the total questions answered. None was referred to an agency chief executive.

Hong Kong

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current position on discussions regarding terms to be offered to expatriate civil servants currently based in Hong Kong.

Mr. Goodlad: We consulted the Association of Members of Her Majesty's Overseas Civil Service in Hong Kong in March on a proposed package of benefits. The association suggested a number of changes to the package. These suggestions will be carefully considered before the package is finalised.

Iraq

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Kuwaitis are being kept in Iraqi prisons as a consequence of the Gulf war; and what representations he, or international bodies, have been making about these prisoners.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Kuwaiti Government estimate that 592 Kuwaitis are unaccounted for after the Gulf war.

We raise the plight of Kuwaiti and other detainees with the Iraqi Government at every suitable opportunity, for example at the next Security Council review of sanctions on 17 May. We also fully support the International Red Cross in its efforts to persuade Iraq to respond to requests for information about the detainees.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimates exist of the number of foreign nationals being kept in Iraqi prisons; how many of these are British; and what representations are being made about access to them and about their release.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no record of any British citizens being held in Iraqi prisons at the moment. Records are not kept of detained foreign nationals.

Bulgaria

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's current relations with Bulgaria; and when a senior Government Minister last visited that country.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We enjoy friendly relations with Bulgaria and strongly support Bulgaria's political and economic reforms. President Zhelev called on the Prime Minister in March. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs visited Bulgaria in June last year. He and I look forward to receiving Foreign Minister Daskalov on 19 May.

Human Rights

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government are supporting the proposal of the Belgian Government that the European Union accede to the European convention on human rights as a collective entity.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We see no need for the Community, as a collective entity, to accede to the convention when its principles are already applied and observed at all levels within the Community. All the member states are parties to the convention, and the European Court of Justice applies the principles and case law of the convention, as necessary, to cases before it. We do not see that accession by the Community would bring any extra benefit to the individual citizen, and are thus not in favour of a proposal which would have only symbolic value.

European Union

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the commitments made by chancellor Kohl to the European Parliament at the time it was voting on enlargement; and in what way each of those commitments bind (a) the EU institution or (b) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Chancellor Kohl said that he would

"endeavour to have a working group set up, composed of governments as well as European Members of Parliament, and which would work in association with the Commission."

Chancellor Kohl's commitment is not binding, since the precise terms of reference for the working group will be decided by member states at the Corfu European Council.

South Africa

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when trade sanctions against the Republic of South Africa will be lifted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The only sanctions remaining in force against South Africa are the UN arms embargo and related European Union and Commonwealth restrictions. The European Union has agreed that it will work for the earliest possible lifting of remaining UN sanctions and concurrently to withdraw related EU measures.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the embargo on the sale of arms to the Republic of South Africa will be lifted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It is for the United Nations Security Council to decide when to lift the arms embargo. The European Union has agreed that it will work for the earliest possible lifting of remaining UN sanctions and concurrently to withdraw related EU measures. The President of the Security Council has promised President Mandela that, on receipt of a request from the new South African Government, the Council will urgently debate lifting the arms embargo.

TRANSPORT

Road Schemes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from local authorities with designated assisted area status which are trying to progress necessary infrastructure schemes on the effect of the removal of automatic supplementary credit approval for road schemes under the Industrial Development Act 1982; and what plans he has to review this policy.

Mr. Key: The Department has received representations from three local authorities and a local authority association about recently revised arrangements for grants under section 13 of the Industrial Development Act—IDA. Under the new arrangements grants are calculated on the total costs of schemes and deductions are no longer made for contributions from European regional development fund grants and from the private sector. The changes are intended to ensure that as many worthwhile schemes as possible can be supported and to provide incentives to maximise private sector involvement. Supplementary credit approvals—SCAs—have never been automatically available, but local authorities can continue to include bids for SCAs in their transport policies and programmes.

Contracts

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the companies with which his Department has had contracts since 1 September 1990 which have resulted in either financial or administrative problems and have consequently been either renegotiated or terminated.

Mr. Norris: The firms which have been identified are shown in the table. It does not include companies whose contracts have been subject to normal variations or those where novation is a purely technical matter resulting from a change of ownership and the contract is transferred to the new company.

As a matter of policy the Department does not seek to renegotiate the terms of existing road scheme contracts in the event of a company getting into financial difficulties. However, since September 1990 one consultant and four contractors have gone into receivership and their contracts have been novated to other firms. Some road construction contracts have also been terminated because of poor performance but information on these is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Name of Company	Description of problems encountered
BCW Communications—1 Contract	The company went into receivership. The contract was novated to another company.
A. F. Budge (Contractors) Ltd—9 Contracts[1]	The company went into receivership. The contract was novated to another company.
Cooper MacDonald plc—3 Contracts[1]	The company went into receivership. The contract was novated to another company.
Eden Construction Ltd—2 Contracts[1]	The company went into receivership. The contract was novated to another company.
A. E. Farr Ltd—1 Contract[1]	The company went into receivership. The contract was novated to another company.
Lilley Construction Ltd—1 Contract[1]	The company went into receivership. The contract was novated to another company.
Colin Buchanan & Partners	The quality of the company's work was not satisfactory. The contract was terminated.
Peter Davidson Consultancy	The company found it could not undertake the requirement as they had proposed in their tender. The contract was renegotiated.
Ferranti International plc—3 Contracts	Ferranti Road Traffic Systems Ltd were sold to Peek Traffic Ltd, necessitating novations of the contracts.
G. & W. Energieanlagen	The company had supplier and other problems. The contract was extended.
Kingswinford Fuel Injection Services Ltd	The company failed to meet the requirement. The contract was terminated.
Precision Profiles	The company failed to deliver on time. The contract was terminated.

Northern Relief Road, Birmingham

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest assesment of the implications of the proposed Birmingham northern relief road on (a) traffic forecasts, (b) carbon dioxide emissions and (c) asthma; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert Key: The question relates to matters which are the responsibility of the Highways Agency; the chief executive will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Ms Joan Walley, dated 17 May 1994.

You asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest assessment of the implications of the proposed Birmingham Northern Relief Road on (a) traffic forecasts, (b) carbon dioxide emissions and (c) asthma.

A Technical Update package was published by Midland Expressway Ltd., the Department's Concessionaire, and the Department at the beginning of February this year. This package includes an update of the traffic information as well as an update on air quality information. A set of the documents which comprise the package is being sent to the House of Commons Library so that you may study them if you wish. They are:

Birmingham Northern Relief Road
Technical Update and Summary
Noise Update Report
Air Quality Update
Local Model Validation Report
Model Development Forecasting Report

I expect you know that a public inquiry into this scheme opens in Walsall on 21 June. Proofs of the detailed evidence to be presented to that inquiry on traffic and air quality are being made available in advance of the inquiry opening. These will add detail to the information in the February Update and explain fully how it has been arrived at. The air quality evidence is available now; the evidence on traffic is expected to be available at the end of this month. Copies of these two proofs can be sent to you if you require them.

It is not possible to say what effect the Birmingham Northern Relief Road itself might have on asthma. The Highways Agency is aware that a large number of studies have been undertaken to investigate the medical effects of air pollution from many sources, including vehicle emissions. There is no evidence that vehicle emissions cause asthma but it is possible that existing asthmatics may have their symptons made worse.

Rail Chiefs

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the current rates of pay to (a) the chairman of British Rail and (b) the chairman of Railtrack; and what are the figures as a percentage of the 1993-94 salary rate.

Mr. Freeman: The current rates of pay, which are at 1993-94 salary rates, are £131,663 to the chairman of British Rail and £121,800 to the chairman of Railtrack.

However, the chairman of the British Railways Board's salary as from 1 April 1994 is 60 per cent. of his previous salary, reflecting his move to a three-day week from his previous full-time appointment.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list details and costs of the services or benefits made available in addition to salary to (a) the chairman of British Rail, (b) the chairman of Railtrack, (c) the rail regulator and (d) the franchise director.

Mr. Freeman: Information in the case of the chairman of British Rail was given in note 5(c) to the "British Railways Board Annual Report and Accounts 1992-93". Disclosure will be made also in subsequent annual reports and accounts of the British Railways Board, and is to be expected for the chairman of Railtrack in the annual report and accounts of Railtrack plc.

The rail regulator and the franchise director each have a pension arrangement broadly by analogy with the principal civil service pension scheme, with no special enhancements, on salary up to the level of the pension schemes earning cap—£76,800 from 6 April 1994, normally increased annually in line with retail prices.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the criteria, other than inflation, used to determine the percentage increase on 1993-94 salary rates for (a) the rail regulator and (b) the franchise director; and what were the percentage increases in each case.

Mr. Freeman: Increases in the remuneration of the rail regulator and the franchise director are determined by my right hon. Friend in the light of the Government's decision on recommendations made by the Senior Salaries Review Body and the subsequent Treasury guidance on the consequential arrangements for chairmen and members of non-commercial public boards and holders of broadly similar appointments. The decision on the body's 1994 report was announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 3 February 1994, Official Report, column 848-50. As regards the percentage increases awarded to the rail regulator and the franchise director from 1 April 1994, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to her on 9 May, Official Report, column 56.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the criteria, other than inflation, that he is using to determine the 1994-95 salary increases for (a) the chairman of British Rail and (b) the chairman of Railtrack.

Mr. Freeman: Salary increases will be determined in the light of the Government's policy to pay no more than is necessary to retain and motivate suitably qualified board members and will take account of any 1994-95 pay increases which may be agreed for the staff.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secrtary of State for Transport when the salaries for 1994-95 for (a) the chairman of British Rail and (b) the chairman of Railtrack will be detemined; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Salaries for 1994-95, which will require approval by Treasury, will be determined in due course.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost in each case of the company cars available to (a) the chairman of British Rail, (b) the chairman of Railtrack, (c) the rail regulator and (d) the franchise director.

Mr. Freeman: The provision of company cars and the consequent cost for the chairman of British Rail and the chairman of Railtrack is a matter between them and the industry concerned.

The rail regulator and the franchise director head non-ministerial Government departments and are entitled, under their terms of appointment, to have the use of a car for official business, the costs of which are charged to their departments.

Night Flying

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those airports in England and Wales at which flights are allowed after (a) 12.30 am and (b) 1 am on a consistent basis.

Mr. Norris: Of the 28 airports in England and Wales subject to economic regulation—that is, those with an annual turnover in excess of £1 million—night operations are not prohibited at the following, although various restrictions apply:

Birmingham
Blackpool
Bournemouth
Bristol (Lulsgate)
Cambridge
Cardiff
Coventry
East Midlands
Exeter
Gatwick
Gloucestershire
Heathrow
Humberside
Leeds-Bradford
Liverpool
Luton
Manchester
Newcastle
Norwich
Southampton
Southend
Stansted
Teesside

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many weekly take-offs and landings there were at airports in England and Wales between midnight and 5 am.

Mr. Norris: The precise information requested is not available, and an approximation could be derived only at disproportionate cost.

Railtrack

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the cost of setting up Railtrack Headquarters in London; and what arrangements have been made for the provision of information and answering of queries concerning services now that the changeover has been made.

Mr. Freeman: Staff costs, legal fees and accommodation costs including refurbishment of Railtrack headquarters amounted to some £7 million in 1993-94.

Information about train services is the responsibility of train operating companies. Railtrack is responsible for the production of a national train timetable and can provide information about that.

School Transport

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many schoolchildren have been (a) injured and (b) killed while travelling to school on a school coach or minibus in each of the last five years.

Mr. Key: It is not possible to identify school coaches or minibuses in the road injury accident data collection system. However, it is possible to identify school pupil casualties in coaches and minibuses during journeys to and from school. Estimates of the information requested are shown in the following table.

School pupil[1] casualties: killed or injured in a journey to or from school: Great Britain 1988-92

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Warwick and Leamington can expect a response to his letter of complaint about the Child Support Agency's treatment of his constituent, Mr. N. A. Leach, of Leamington Spa, about which he wrote to the Under-Secretary of State on 23 February.

Mr. Burt: I replied to the hon. Member today.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals have been made to child support appeal tribunals to-date; in how many of these cases the Child Support Agency has forwarded submissions and how many of these met the target of responding to the independent tribunal service within 18 days; how many of these appeals have been heard to date; and in how many of those the child support officer's decision has been overturned.

Mr. Burt: I am informed that the number of child support appeals received by the independent tribunal service to the end of April is 2,070. On these appeals, the Child Support Agency has forwarded a total of 521 submissions; 184 within the 18 day target. By 30 April, 250 appeals had been heard, of which 221 have been finally decided. In 91 of the decided cases the child support officer's decision was overturned.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the purpose of the Child Support Agency event at Abberley in Worcestershire from 9 May to 11 May; which hotel was used; how many people attended the event; what was the estimated cost; and from how many hotels quotations were sought.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Terry Davis, dated 16 May 1994.

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency's event at Abberley.

The event in question was a management training course for staff at the Child Support Agency Centre in Dudley. It was held at the Elms Hotel, Abberley and was attended by nine members of the Agency's staff. The total cost incurred was £1,515.40. Quotations were sought from nine hotels before making the reservation.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Health Insurance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what percentage of invalidity benefit recipients are in receipt of payments from permanent health insurance schemes; and what is the average amount paid per week.

Mr. Scott: This information is not available.

Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the most recent date before 6 May on which he met the Minister of State for Disabled People to discuss the progress of the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill.

Mr. Lilley: I discussed a number of matters, including the Government's proposals on civil rights for disabled people, with my right hon. Friend, the Minister of State, on 4 May.

Identity Cards

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce identity cards for pensioners and other claimants.

Mr. Hague: We are currently looking at improved ways of confirming the identity of the recipients of benefit payments cashed at post offices.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 17 March concerning a constituent ref. 6/3644/76.

Mr. Burt: I replied to the hon. Member today.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his Department's funding for research into Alzheimer's disease.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Medical Research Council, which receives its funding from the Office of Science and Technology, spent £1·5 million on research directly related to Alzheimer's disease in 1992-93, and a further £3.4 million on research of relevance to the condition.

The MRC is always willing to consider soundly based scientific proposals in competition with other applications for research funding.

Executive Search Agencies

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 10 May, Official Report, column 134, what was the total cost of the use of executive search agencies in 1992-93.

Mr. David Davis: No figures are held centrally for the costs of using search consultants in 1992-93; these costs are paid direct by the departments and agencies which use them.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what guidance is given by his Department to Government Departments and agencies regarding the use of executive search agencies and particularly regarding their cost to public funds.

Mr. David Davis: Advice on the use of executive search consultants is given in the "Guide on Public Appointments Procedures", produced in September 1992, by the Public Appointments Unit, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

More detailed information about the executive search process and what it involves is given in "Executive Searchlight", of which the third edition was issued by the unit in February 1994. This includes guidance on how and when to use executive search, and the need to ensure that this form of recruitment meets the requirements of the Department and provides value for money. I am arranging for a copy of this publication to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 10 May, Official Report, column 134, if he will name the six executive search agencies referred to as being used by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. David Davis: The six search consultants used by Departments for 11 appointments approved by the commissioners at grade 5 level and above in 1992-93 were:

Korn Ferry International Ltd.
NB Selection Ltd.
Price Waterhouse Executive Selection
Russell Reynolds Associates
St. James's Management Recruitment
Saxton Bampfylde International PLC

Charterline

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total cost to public funds of the Charterline; and how many calls it received.

Mr. David Davis: Total costs, including set-up and operational costs to date were £2,463,190. The final figures will be published when final bills are received.

Charterline received 5,882 calls between 19 May 1993 and 6 May 1994.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Accountants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will provide a table showing the contracts currently being worked on for his Department by Coopers and Lybrand, Ernst and Young, Price Waterhouse, KPMG Peat Marwick, Grant Thornton, Robson Rhodes, Levy Gee, BDO Binder Hamlyn, Hacker Young, Pannell Kerr Forster and Stoy Hayward.

The Attorney-General [pursuant to his reply 31 March 1994, Official Report, column 953-54]: In addition to the contracts listed in my earlier answer, Price Waterhouse was on 31 March 1994 working on a contract for the Serious Fraud Office in relation to the case of Arrows plc.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishery Protection

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will increase the level of surveillance by the Royal Navy to fishery protection duties in the English channel off the coast of Devon; and if she will make a statement as to the level of activity that the Royal Navy is currently providing in this area.

Mr. Jack: Deployment of the Royal Navy's fishery protection vessels within British fishery limits takes account of the nature and level of fishing activity, as well as sightings information provided by fisheries surveillance aircraft on contract to the Ministry and local intelligence collected by the sea fisheries inspectorate. Deployment is flexible and is adjusted as and when necessary to take account of changing circumstances and the needs in particular areas. In the first four months of 1994 vessels on task to MAFF were present in ICES area VIIe, which includes the waters off south Devon, for 129 patrol days.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will set out all (a) British and (b) EC legislation governing the welfare of animals during transit.

Mr. Soames: British legislation governing the welfare of animals during transport is as listed.

Section 1(b) of the Protection of Animals Act 1911
Section 1(b) of the Protection of Animals (Scotland) Act 1912
Sections 40 to 42 and 44 to 47 of the Animals Health Act 1981
The Transit of Animals Order of 1927, S.R.& O.1927/289
The Animals (Sea Transport) Order of 1930, S.R.& O. 1930/923
The Horses (Sea Transport) Order 1952, S.I. 1952/1291
The Export of Horses (Veterinary Examination) Order 1966, S.I. 1966/507
The Export of Horses (Protection) Order 1969, S.I. 1969/1784
The Transit of Animals (General) Order 1973, S.I. 1973/1377
The Transit of Animals (Road and Rail) Order 1975, S.I. 1975/1024
The Importation of Animals Order 1977, S.I. 1977/1175
The Export of Animals (Protection) Order 1981, S.I. 1981/1051
The Welfare of Poultry (Transport) Order 1988, S.I. 1988/851
The Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1992, S.I. 1992/3304

At Community level the welfare of animals during transport is governed by Council directive 91/628/EEC (OJ No. L340, 11.12.91, p.17). This is implemented by the 1992 order as well as some of the earlier orders, as is set out in the explanatory note of the 1992 order. The directive permits certain national legislation to be retained pending the adoption of further detailed rules. The United Kingdom has taken advantage of this by maintaining certain national rules, in particular a maximum interval of 15 hours for feeding and watering animals in transport.

Rabbits

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what enforcement action has been taken by her officials in accordance with their powers under the Pests Act 1954 to ensure that occupiers of land remove rabbits from it;

(2) what action she is taking to meet the statutory obligations under the Pests Act 1954 to control the number of rabbits on land used for rail and road transport; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Section 1 of the Pests Act 1954 places a continuing obligation on occupiers of land designated as rabbit clearance areas to control rabbits harboured on their land. The current Rabbit Clearance Order, issued in 1972, covers the whole of England and Wales excluding the City of London, the Isles of Scilly and Skokholm island. This obligation is irrespective of the use being made of the occupier's land.

Where occupiers are failing to meet their obligations under the 1954 Act, the Agriculture Ministers have the power, under section 98 of the Agriculture Act 1947, to require action to be taken. These powers are discretionary and MAFF generally seeks to gain compliance with the legislation without resorting to the use of its legal powers. Nevertheless, these powers remain available and are invoked where necessary. MAFF is aware of the damage that rabbits can cause and keeps its policy on rabbit control under continual review.

Meat Exports (Germany)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action she plans to take if Germany decides to impose a partial ban on the import of British beef and veal; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: We have made it very clear that we would not accept a unilateral trade restriction if this were to be imposed by the German Government. The European Commission has made it clear to the German authorities that it too sees no justification for such measures and that it would take appropriate action.

A range of measures have already been introduced nationally and at Community level to protect consumers from any possible health hazard because of bovine spongiform encephalopathy. BSE has been discussed many times at expert and political level within the European Union and no less than three times in recent months at Council of Ministers level. The view of the Commission and all member states except Germany, is that there is no scientific justification for further measures.

Fisheries

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fishing vessels left the non-sector to join fish producer organisations between 1993 and 1994; how much cod quota in total and per boat average went with them; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Between 1 January 1993 and 1 January 1994, 146 vessels moved from the non-sector to producer organisations. Information about the cod quota attributable to the vessels which left the non-sector is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries asnd Food if she will make it her policy to persuade the European Commission to abandon fishing discards before Norway joins the European Union.

Mr. Jack: Discards occur since different species and sizes of fish are caught together. If fishermen are to comply with the current common fisheries policy rules on quotas and minimum landing sizes they necessarily have to discard fish which cannot be legally landed. In Norwegian waters the mix of species and the legal requirements are different and a discard ban is in operation. Under its accession treaty, Norway has been authorised to maintain its discard ban for three years.

The Government support the search for ways to reduce discards within the CFP. However, banning discards is not a practicable proposition, if the CFP is to operate effectively. The Council of Ministers has considered a Commission report on the discard problem and asked the Commission to bring forward proposals for action on a Community-wide basis. To this end, the Commission is funding a two-year project, which began in October 1993, to examine more selective fishing gears and the technical operational, economic and social pressures surrounding their adoption, taking account of regional variations. Recommendations are to be made as to how the Community might adapt its policies more effectively to promote selective fishing and reduce discards.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on the changes to the common fisheries policy British fishermen will need to adopt (a) in the preparation for Norway's entry into the European Union and (b) once Norway has joined.

Mr. Jack: In my reply of 19 April to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell), Official Report, columns 440-41, I set out the provisions on fisheries management in the treaty of accession.

Few changes are made, by the accession treaty to the reciprocal rights of access for Norway and the EU to each others' waters and fisheries. The Commission has proposed a system of fishing permits to control the exploitation of Community resources when the CFP applies to an enlarged Community and the Council is likely to consider this at its June meeting. It is for the Commission to propose any further new or amending regulations which may be necessary.

Scrapie

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of sheep scrapie have been notified in Great Britain during each month since notification became a legal requirement.

Mr. Soames: Scrapie became notifiable on 1 January 1993.

The table provides details of the number of cases of scrapie confirmed in sheep by laboratory investigations from 1 January 1993 to 30 April 1994.

	1993	1994

[1] These are provisional figures and may be subject to alteration.

Note:

Laboratory investigation of suspect cases of scrapie is not usually carried out for two years after the disease has been confirmed in a flock/herd.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what experiments have been performed in Great Britain over the last 10 years which involve the inoculation or feeding of cattle with infected material from sheep scrapie; and what were the results.

Mr. Soames: Since 1984 no experiments involving the inoculation or feeding of cattle with infective material from sheep with scrapie have been undertaken in Great Britain.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been undertaken in Great Britain over the last 10 years into the possible relationship of scrapie in sheep and motor neurone disease in the human population.

Mr. Soames: Motor neurone disease of man and scrapie of sheep are quite separate and distinct diseases. The Ministry is not aware of any such research.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information she has on differences in the properties of strains of scrapie from Suffolk sheep from the USA and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: Scrapie isolates from sheep can be strain-typed by identifying their biological characteristics in mice. Strains which have been derived by selection in mice may not be the same as those existing in the sheep from which the material was originally obtained. This Ministry is not aware of any direct comparison of strains of scrapie derived from sheep in the USA and sheep in Great Britain, that have been undertaken using the same strains of mice in the same laboratory. However it is known that at least one strain of scrapie—as determined by mouse bioassay—is common to British and USA sheep.

Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the names of consultancies held by members of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee during the last five years.

Mr. Soames: Members of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee are not asked to provide this information.

Animal Health

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what specific measures she plans to take to ensure that Britain's animal health and veterinary standards are not jeopardised by moves to harmonise such standards throughout Europe; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for North Cornwall (Mr. Tyler) on 27 April, Official Report, column 230.

Sheep Exports

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action her Department has taken concerning reported deaths of sheep travelling between Portsmouth and France; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: It has been reported that 30 dead sheep were found after a vehicle was unloaded from a ferry sailing between Portsmouth and St. Malo on 19 April. It has also been reported that in a separate incident on 25 April 39 sheep were found to be dead in similar circumstances after crossing from Portsmouth to Le Havre. No carcases have been made available either to the British or French authorities to determine the cause of death. The Ministry has discussed the circumstances of both cases with the exporters, ferry companies and Hampshire county council, which is responsible for enforcing the legislation on the welfare of animals during transport. It has been concluded that there is insufficient evidence to prove beyond all reasonable doubt that any person carried out an action so as to cause the animals unnecessary suffering.

The Ministry has issued comprehensive guidance for exporters and ferry operators about the standards to be observed when livestock is carried on roll on/roll off ferries. Steps have been taken to remind exporters about the importance of following this guidance and the Ministry will be inviting ferry operators to participate in discussions about their procedures for ensuring that proper arrangements are made to safeguard the welfare of animals.

EMPLOYMENT

Working Mothers

7. Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of lone mothers with dependent children were in work in 1979; and what percentage of lone mothers with dependent children are now in work.

14. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of lone mothers with dependent children were in work in 1979; and what percentage of lone mothers with dependent children are now in work.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest estimates from the labour force survey for autumn 1993 show that 37 per cent. of lone mothers of working age with dependent children were in employment. The equivalent figure for spring 1981 —the earliest date available—is 45 per cent.

Unemployment

13. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by what percentage the unemployment rate changed during the period 1974 to 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: During the period of the last Labour Government unemployment increased by 122 per cent.

Social Chapter

15. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations his Department has received from business men or business organisations urging the Government to adopt the social chapter.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The overwhelming majority of British business supports the Government's decision to reject the social chapter because of its adverse effects on jobs and prosperity.

30. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received concerning the United Kingdom adopting the social chapter.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's decision to reject the social chapter was supported by the great majority of employers' organisations because of the damage it would have done to the United Kingdom economy and jobs.

Senior Managers

16. Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what initiatives he has encouraged to improve opportunities for women to progress into senior management positions.

Mr. David Hunt: Our new joint initiative with the Equal Opportunities Commission Fair Play for Women, will promote and expand the role of women at work, building on the success of our New Horizons campaign, our out-of-school childcare initiative and our support for the employer-led Opportunity 2000.

Full Employment

17. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to achieve full employment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Employment cannot be created by Act of Parliament or by Government action alone. Government policy will be directed to bringing conditions favourable to the maintenance of a high level of employment.

Part-time Employment

18. Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures will be brought forward to continue to enhance growth in part-time employment in the United Kingdom.

Miss Widdecombe: We shall continue with policies designed to create a flexible and deregulated labour market.

Works Councils

19. Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to impose statutory trade union-dominated works councils on the businesses of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None.

Economic Competitiveness

20. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures his Department is taking to improve the competitiveness of the United Kingdom economy.

Mr. David Hunt: In the submission my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer and I made at the G7 jobs conference in Detroit, we said that we would improve competitiveness by:

enhancing the working of the labour market; increasing the ability of unemployed people to get jobs and encouraging investment in skills.

Unemployment, Dartford

21. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons are unemployed in the Dartford travel-to-work area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Dartford is covered by the London travel-to-work area, where unadjusted claimant unemployment in March 1994 stood at 414,551. This is 24,621 or 6 per cent. lower than in April 1993.

Employment Appeal Tribunal

22. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will review the working and running of the Employment Appeal Tribunal with a view to strengthening its independence from the Executive.

Miss Widdecombe: The Employment Appeal Tribunal is an entirely independent judical body.

Labour Statistics

23. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the total of civilian employment in Yorkshire and Humberside has changed in the last 10 years.

Mr. David Hunt: Between December 1983 and December 1993, the civilian workforce in employment in Yorkshire and Humberside rose by 96,000, or 5 per cent.

24. Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in the total of civilian employment in the west midlands in the last 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Between December 1983 and December 1993, the civilian workforce in employment in the west midlands rose by 73,000 or 3 per cent.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the Harrogate/Knaresborough travel-to-work area have been placed in work by the Employment Service in the past 12 months.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Robert Banks, dated 17 May 1994.

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question asking how many people in the Harrogate travel to work area have been placed in work by the Employment Service in the past twelve months.

It may be helpful if I explain that Jobcentre boundaries do not match travel to work area boundaries. Harrogate travel to work area covers the towns of Harrogate and Knaresborough, and villages mainly to the north west of Harrogate. Harrogate is the only Jobcentre in the travel to work area. The Jobcentre boundary closely matches the travel to work area, but also includes Wetherby which falls into the neighbouring Leeds travel to work area.

In the past twelve months, up to and including 8 April 1994, a total of 5,379 people have been placed in work by the Harrogate Employment Service Jobcentre.

I hope this is helpful.

28. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in (a) absolute terms and (b) percentage terms in unemployment in the parliamentary constituencies of Bradford, West and Bradford, South over the period April 1992 to March 1994.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In Bradford, West unadjusted claimant unemployment fell by 11, or 0·2 per cent., and in Bradford, South it rose by 13, or 0·3 per cent.

26. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps his Department is taking to help unemployed people in Buckinghamshire find new jobs.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the year to March 1994, jobcentres in Buckinghamshire placed nearly 19,000 people into jobs—up 15 per cent. on the previous year.

Training and Enterprise Councils

27. Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on funding for training and enterprise councils.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department negotiates funding locally with training and enterprise councils on an annual basis, in line with the contents of their agreed business plans.

Strikes

29. Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many days were lost through strikes in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Germany in the latest year for which figures are available; and what the figures for the United Kingdom and West Germany were in 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: In 1992 the United Kingdom lost 0·5 million days to labour disputes, one third of the former west Germany total of 1·5 million. In 1979 the United Kingdom lost 29·5 million days, over 50 times the west Germany total of 0·5 million.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many working days were lost through strikes in Yorkshire in each year since 1978.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Data for Yorkshire and Humberside are given in the following table:

Year	Working days lost (thousands)
1993	23
1992	46
1991	55
1990	89
1989	325
1988	244
1987	339
1986	250
1985	2,076
1984	9,354
1983	415
1982	575
1981	449
1980	2,832
1979	3,115
1978	799

Earnings

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what monitoring is done by his Department of the wage rates being paid in employment that was covered by wages councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department monitors the earnings of workers by industrial sector, including those sectors where there were wages councils, through the monthly average earnings indices and the annual new earnings survey.

Part-time Workers

25. Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Government intend to introduce legislation to protect part-time workers.

Miss Widdecombe: Only 3 per cent. of employees are disqualified from employment protection on the basis of hours alone. Part-timers benefit from the enhanced rights introduced by the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993.

Hall's Electrical Contracting Company, Ossett

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will investigate the length of notice given to workers at the Hall's electrical contracting company in Ossett, West Yorkshire, when it was closed;

(2) if he will investigate the extent of prior consultations with the workers at the Hall's electrical contracting works in Ossett, West Yorkshire, owned by East Midlands Electricity on the closure of the plant;

(3) if he will set up an inquiry into the manner in which workers at the Ossett electrical contracting business company in West Yorkshire owned by the East Midlands Electricity Board were given notice that the company would close.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answers 16 May 1994]: Any complaint that an employer has failed to consult representatives of recognised trade unions about proposed redundancy dismissals in accordance with the statutory requirements would be a matter for determination by an industrial tribunal. Rights to individual notice of termination are contractual matters, though statutory minimum periods are specified in section 49 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978. Questions concerning proper contractual notice, or pay in lieu of notice, are matters for the courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many amalgamations of magistrates court committee areas he has determined to make; how many committee areas (a) will be affected, and (b) will remain; and if he will list the names of the committee areas that will be affected by each amalgamation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The White Paper "A New Framework for Local Justice", published in February 1992, announced that the Government would like to see a progressive reduction in the number of separate management units, and that we judged that something between 50 and 60 would in due course provide a good balance between the local character of the service and operational needs. The Lord Chancellor has reached no final conclusions about any specific amalgamations.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list all the magistrates court committees that he has consulted about possible amalgamation; and what plans he has to consult other magistrates court committees about amalgamation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: All magistrates courts committees were consulted during 1992 about criteria for magistrates court committee areas and were subsequently consulted on how those criteria could be met in their area. As a result of this, the Lord Chancellor published indicative conclusions as to possible amalgamations, but these do not constitute final decisions. Under the provisions contained in the Police and Magistrates Courts Bill, no order amalgamating or otherwise adjusting the boundaries of a magistrates court committee area could be made without consultation with the magistrates courts committee or committees concerned, except where they themselves had requested that such an order be made.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his oral answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 454, if he will list all the criteria by which he has decided to reduce the number of magistrates court committees.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Any decision to amalgamate or otherwise adjust the boundaries of a magistrates court committee or committees would be taken in the light of local circumstances and against criteria appropriate at that time.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list by year for the last 10 years, and for the year to date, the number of magistrates courts that have been closed.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The provision of magistrates court-house accommodation is a matter for the courts committees for the area concerned in conjunction with the local paying authority. The Department has no central record of the number of magistrates court-houses that have been closed or are scheduled to be closed. A local authority that is aggrieved by a decision of a magistrates court committee to close a court-house has the right of appeal to the Lord Chancellor. Since 1993 the Lord Chancellor has dealt with six appeals and there is currently one appeal outstanding.

Justices' Clerks

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 3 May, Official Report, column 403, if he will list all the other non-judicial functions of justices' clerks.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No definitive list of the non-judicial functions of justices' clerks is possible. Section 28(3) of the Justices of the Peace Act 1979 states what the functions of a justices' clerk include, and section 28(4) of the Act goes on to state that subsection (3) ". . . shall not be taken as defining or in any respect limiting the powers and duties belonging to a justices' clerk . . .".

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many parliamentary questions, in the period November 1992 to March 1993, were answered with the response that the information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost; how many were referred on to an agency chief executive; and, in each case, what percentage of the total number of questions asked this constituted.

Mr. John M. Taylor: During this period 16 questions tabled to me were not answered on the basis of disproportionate cost and nine were referred on to an agency chief executive. These figures represent 4·22 per cent. and 2·37 per cent. respectively of the total number of questions tabled to me.

Trial Waiting Times

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the current average waiting time for trial at (a) magistrates courts and (b) Crown courts for (i) defendants granted bail and (ii) those remanded in custody in (1) Doncaster, (2) Barnsley, (3) Rotherham and (4) Sheffield.

Mr. John M. Taylor: For the magistrates courts the average time from listing to completion for indictable and either way offences for the named metropolitan districts in 1993 were as follows:

	Weeks
Doncaster	7·0
Barnsley	12·0
Rotherham	7·4
Sheffield	8·6

However, the Barnsley figures are less reliable statistically than the others as only a small number of defendants was surveyed. Given the sample sizes, these figures cannot be broken down to show defendants granted bail and those remanded in custody without producing unrepresentative results.

The average time from committal for trial to arraignment or start of trial for defendants dealt with at the Crown court centre in Doncaster during four months to the end of March 1994 was 17·6 weeks for those remanded on bail and 13·5 weeks for those remanded in custody. The corresponding times for the centre in Sheffield were 24 weeks and 17·5 weeks respectively. Barnsley and Rotherham do not have Crown court centres.

Child Witnesses

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the courts, adult and juvenile, in the London area which now have screens, television equipment and pre-recorded interview facilities or other equipment for the use of child witnesses in court cases in which they are involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The following courts in the London area are fitted with live television link equipment and video playback equipment for use in the presentation of evidence by child witnesses. The use of screens by child witnesses is available at all courts upon the direction of the judge.

Central Criminal Court
Crown Court at Croydon (two sets)
Crown Court at Harrow
Crown Court at Kingston-upon-Thames
Crown Court at Southwark
Crown Court at Wood Green
Crown Court at Woolwich
Thames Magistrates' Court

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications from foreign nationals to enter or remain in the United Kingdom on the basis of a stable and committed homosexual partnership with a United Kingdom national have been received in each of the last five years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not separately identified in the statistics.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to allow foreign nationals to enter or remain in the United Kingdom on the basis of a stable and committed homosexual partnership with a United Kingdom national; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. I refer the hon. Member to the remarks that I made in reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) in the Adjournment debate on 4 May on the case of Mr. Bryan Ruppert, Official Report, columns 820-26.

Colin Ivor Dunning (Appeal)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will refer the case of Colin Ivor Dunning to the Court of Appeal under the provisions of section 17 of the Criminal Appeals Act 1968; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The representations submitted on Mr. Dunning's behalf in February 1994, together with earlier representations, are currently being considered. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State will determine in the light of that consideration whether it would be right to refer Mr. Dunning's case to the Court of Appeal or to take any other action in the matter.

Vehicle Crime

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list for each police authority in 1992 the number of known offenders found guilty of or cautioned for offences of (a) theft of a motor vehicle or (b) unauthorised taking of a motor vehicle; and what proportion of the total number of known offenders in total and in each category were (i) juveniles and (ii) young adults;

(2) if he will list for each police authority in 1992 the number of known offenders found guilty of or cautioned for offences of theft from a motor vehicle; and what proportion of those offenders were (i) juveniles and (ii) young adults.

Mr. Maclean: The information is given in the tables.

[1] Theft Act 1968 Section 1.

Ethnic Minorities

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the mechanism under which submissions are to be made for section 11 funding.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The matter is under consideration. I will write to the hon. Member once the position is clearer.

Police Complaints Authority

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances the Police Complaints Authority may withhold evidence in criminal proceedings.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The responsibilities of the Police Complaints Authority do not normally involve the supply of evidence. Where a police investigation discloses material which may be of relevance to criminal proceedings, either in the past or under consideration for the future, any such material would be made available to the Crown Prosecution Service by the police.

Justice and Home Affairs Council

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the agenda which has been proposed for the forthcoming meeting in Greece of the Justice and Home Affairs Ministers of the member states of the European Union treaty on 20 and 21 June, meeting in accordance with the title U1 of the European Union treaty.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No draft agenda has yet been proposed.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the results of the meeting of the Interior Ministers of the member states of the European Union, meeting in accordance with Title U1 of the European Union treaty, in Thessalonika, Greece on 6 and 7 May.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The meeting in Thessalonika on 6 and 7 May was an informal meeting of the Justice and Home Affairs Council. As such, it did not reach any formal conclusions. Representatives of the member states continued a wide-ranging debate of the Commission's recent communication on immigration and asylum policy.

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money has now been seized as a consequence of convictions involving section 1 of the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986.

Mr. Maclean: Information collected centrally is given in the table:

Amount (£) recovered[1] by the Secretary of State in Confiscation orders under the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 by financial year 1987-88—1992-93 England and Wales

Year	Amount recovered £
1987-88	600,000
1988-89
1989-90[2]	1,375,200
1990-91[2]	1,448,000
1991-92	5,384,500
1992-93	5,180,900

[1] The information collected centrally is known to be incomplete as returns were not received from all petty sessional divisions.

[2] There was some confusion with the recording of the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 and the Criminal Justice Act 1988 during these two years. In consequence it is considered that data has been under-recorded for the Drug Trafficking offence Act 1986 and over-recorded for the Criminal Justice Act 1988.

Misuse of Drugs Act

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money has now been paid over to constabularies as a consequence of the provisions of section 27 of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971.

Mr. Maclean: Information is not collected centrally on the type or monetary value of property ordered to be forfeited.

Trans-sexual Prisoners

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available gender reassignment treatment to Kelly Denise Richards, currently serving a sentence at HM Prison, Parkhurst; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 18 May 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about gender reassignment for Kelly Richards, a prisoner currently at Parkhurst prison.

Kelly Richards, who is also known as David Cross, has been seen by a consultant psychiatrist and a doctor from the Gender Identity clinic at Charing Cross hospital. No treatment has been recommended and arrangements are currently being made for Mr. Cross to be seen by another consultant.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of his Department on male-to-female trans-sexuals serving sentences in male prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter From Derek Lewis to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 18 May 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the policy on male to female transsexuals serving sentences in male prisons.

The handling of transsexuals in prisons is dificult, both in administrative and medical terms.

Any transsexual is likely to have difficulties in adjusting to prison life, and it is more often than not necessary to segregate in a vulnerable prisoner unit or prison health care centre those whose transsexuality is obvious. We prefer to treat each case individually and the principal criteria is the most obvious physical characteristics of the person concerned and their ability to integrate with other inmates. A male to female transsexual who had undergone surgery and hormone treatment would therefore be more appropriately allocated to a femal establishment. Conversely, a transsexual who had not undergone any form of treatment would be unlikely to be accepted by fellow inmates in an establishment for the gender of their choice.

Nessun Quinliven and Pearse McAuley

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps have been taken to initiate formal extradition proceedings in the Irish Republic against Nessun Quinliven and Pearse McAuley; what discussions with the authorities in the Irish Republic have taken place; and what has been the Irish Republic's response;

(2) when he was first informed of the capture by the Irish Republic's authorities of Nessun Quinliven and Pearse McAuley; and whether he was officially given details by the Irish Government.

Mr. Maclean: The Metropolitan police was informed by the Irish authorities on 4 April and 9 April 1993 of the arrests in that country of Nessun Quinliven and of Pearse McAuley on those days. The Irish authorities were immediately informed of our interest in securing the return of the two men, in respect of whom arrest warrants had been issued here. But as I explained in my letter to the hon. Member of 4 August 1993, the domestic Irish proceedings against Quinliven and McAuley take precedence over requests for extradition. Nessun Quinliven was sentenced to four years' imprisonment on 7 October 1993, and Pearse McAuley to seven years on 18 November 1993, by the Dublin Special Criminal Court. These sentences of imprisonment will have to be served before they could be surrendered to the United Kingdom authorities.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Dependent Territories

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his responsibilities for the environment of Pitcairn island and other dependent territories.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 14 February, Official Report, column 581, which outlines the FCO's responsibilities for the dependent territories.

The setting of domestic policies and priorities is a matter for the dependent territories' own Governments. Environmental protection is a high priority for them. We are consulting the dependent territories on their participation in environmental agreements which are most appropriate to their particular circumstances.

We take seriously the issue of environmental protection in the Pitcairn Islands. We are preparing a management plan to address conservation issues on Henderson Island. Any conservation measures will need to take into account the isolation and remoteness of the Pitcairn Islands and must be agreed by the islanders.

Multilateral Trade Negotiations

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when copies of the final Act embodying the results of the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations and the agreement establishing the World Trade Organisation signed at Marrakesh on 15 April will be presented to Parliament.

Mr. Hurd: Copies of the final Act embodying the results of the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations and the agreement establishing the World Trade Organisation were presented to Parliament and published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office as Command Papers, miscellaneous series, on Monday 16 May.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

English Heritage

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage on how many occasions, and in what circumstances, he has disregarded the advice of English Heritage on the listing of historic buildings.

Mr. Brooke: The advice of English Heritage is never disregarded, but my decisions must finally be my own judgment of a building's special architectural or historic interest.

Since April 1992, I have added 5,550 buildings to the statutory lists. During that period, I have decided in 55 cases not to accept recommendations from English Heritage in favour of listing. In a very small number of cases, I have decided to list buildings against the advice of English Heritage.

Outdoor Education Centres

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what contribution the Sports Council has made to developing an accreditation scheme for outdoor activity centres;

(2) what support his Department has provided to the Sports Council and the English tourist board in developing a code of practice for outdoor education centres.

Mr. Sproat: I refer to the answer given to the hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Mr. Jamieson) on Monday 16 May, Official Report, column 347.

Film Lighting

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will commission a report on competition in the film lighting supply industry; and what recent representations on this subject he has received.

Mr. Brooke: I have recently received a representation from my hon. Friend on this subject. The Director General of Fair Trading is responsible for reviewing competition in markets, and any concerns that my hon. Friend has should be referred to him.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Primates

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 29 April, Official Report, column 377, if she will list those establishments which have been approved as sources of primates under directive 92/65.

Mr. Soames: No establishment has yet completed the necessary approval procedures to be a source of primates under directive 92/65.

Animal Exports

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will place in the Library a copy of the recent investigation undertaken by staff of her chief veterinary officer into alleged irregularities in the veterinary certification of the export of live farm animals.

Mr. Soames: The investigations into alleged irregularities in the veterinary export certification of farm animals are continuing. Some are being undertaken by local authorities assisted by investigation officers of the Department and prosecutions may follow. These matters are therefore sub judice and, as is normal practice, copies of the investigations will not be placed in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Forestry Commission

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 9 May, Official Report, column 48, on what date he will publish the document which will form the basis of consultation on the Government's preferred options for the future of the Forestry Commission.

Sir Hector Monro: I have nothing further to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Gentleman on 9 May, Official Report, column 48.

Waste Water Treatment Directive

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress he has made with the identification of sensitive areas and high natural dispersion areas in connection with the urban waste water treatment directive; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The Scottish waters identified as sensitive areas and high natural dispersion areas —HNDAs —in connection with the urban waste water treatment directive are set out in the table.

The general requirement of the directive is that all discharges of urban waste water from a population equivalent of 2,000 or more to freshwaters or estuaries, or 10,000 or more to coastal waters, should receive secondary treatment.

In areas identified as sensitive, more stringent treatment will be required while in HNDAs, the directive permits less stringent treatment—but at least primary treatment. The adequacy of less stringent treatment to prevent adverse effects on the environment requires to be demonstrated by comprehensive studies and confirmed by subsequent monitoring.

A map showing the locations of these areas has been prepared and will be forwarded to the European Commission. It will be made available for public inspection at the offices of the river purification authorities and meanwhile has been placed in the Library of the House.

Sensitive Areas
- River Almond (Cramond to Whitburn)
- Forfar Loch/Dean Water
- South Calder Water/Strathclyde Park Loch

High Natural Dispersion Areas (HNDAs)
- Eyemouth Coast
- Firth of Forth
- Forth Estuary (E)
- Firth of Tay (E)
- Angus Coast (South)
- Angus Coast (North)
- Kincardine Coast
- Peterhead Coast
- Fraserburgh Coast
- Banff Coast
- Buckie Coast
- Moray Firth (Lossiemouth/Burghead)
- Cromarty Firth (E)
- Wick Bay
- Thurso Bay
- The String, Kirkwall
- Lerwick Harbour
- The Minch (Stornoway)
- Oban Bay
- Campbeltown Loch
- Inner Firth of Clyde
- Clyde Coast (Irvine/Ayr)
- Clyde Coast (Girvan)
- Inner Solway Firth (E)

Note:
All HNDAs are in coastal waters, except those marked (E), which are in estuaries.

Ambulance Service

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what way the Scottish ambulance service becoming a trust will enable it to compete on a level playing field with the other demands on health service finance.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 May 1994]: Trust status for the Scottish ambulance service would allow it to operate on the same basis as the majority of hospitals to which it provides services and which are now NHS trusts. With the exception of the London ambulance service, all ambulance services in the United Kingdom have applied for or have already been granted trust status.

TRANSPORT

Tamar Crossing

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has decided to proceed with the proposal for a second crossing of the River Tamar.

Mr. Key: The proposal for a new crossing of the River Tamar has generated much interest and more than 5,000 people visited the public exhibitions held in the summer. Although the views of the public were evenly balanced, we have also had due regard for the views of the local authorities and other interested parties, who have expressed concern about the economic effects on the local area of a new tolled crossing.

Therefore, I shall be commissioning further studies into these effects as the next step forward on this important project. Officials of the south-west network management division of the Highways Agency will now contact the local authorities to discuss the precise aspects that the studies should cover.

No decision has been taken about the means of financing any new crossing of the Tamar and the degree to which private finance could be involved.

To choose any route corridor in such a beautiful and environmentally important area is difficult, but I am satisfied that if a new crossing of the River Tamar ultimately proceeds, the red route corridor as recommended by my consultants, and preferred by the majority of the people who have made comments on the various route options, is the least damaging in environmental terms. I have therefore decided that this route should be protected from development, but this does not mean that a decision to proceed with the project has definitely been taken: I need to see the outcome of the further studies first.

Network SouthEast

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing for each Network SouthEast division in each four-week period during (a) 1992 and (b) 1993 the number of incidents, including cancellations, which resulted in a headway of (1) more than 20 minutes and (2) more than one hour; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Freeman: This information is not available.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will publish a table showing (1) the number of trains which arrived more than five minutes late during peak hours on each of the Network SouthEast divisions in each four-week period during (a) 1992 and (b) 1993, and the numbers attributable to (i) train breakdowns, (ii) signal failures, (iii) track and points failures, (iv) leaves on the line, (v) staff shortages, (vi) adverse weather conditions, excluding leaves on the line and (vii) other and (2) the percentage of peak hour trains which were on time or up to five minutes late on each of the Network SouthEast divisions in each four-week period during (I) 1992 and (II) 1993;

(2) if he will publish a table showing (1) the number of trains cancelled on each of the Network SouthEast divisions in each four-week period during (a) 1992 and (b) 1993, and the numbers attributable to (i) train breakdowns, (ii) signal failures, (iii) track and points failures, (iv) leaves on the line, (v) staff shortages, (vi) adverse weather conditions, excluding leaves on the line and (vii) other and (2) the percentage of timetabled trains which did not run on each of the Network SouthEast divisions in each four-week period during (I) 1992 and (II) 1993.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested has been placed in the Library and I have sent the hon. Member a copy.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Assistance, East Midlands

Mr. Hoon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the average size and number of regional enterprise grants awarded to companies employing fewer than 25 people in (a) Ashfield, (b) Nottinghamshire and (c) the east midlands since the new assisted areas map was announced in 1993.

Mr. Sainsbury: The average size and number of grants offered on applications received since 1 August 1993 to companies employing fewer than 25 people in Ashfield is £11,847 and 13; for Nottinghamshire £16,831 and 35; and the east midlands £16,418 and 60.

Mr. Hoon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what is the number, average size and average effect in terms of predicted jobs created of grants awarded since the new assisted area map was announced in the east midlands to (a) companies relocating into the area and (b) companies already located in the area;

(2) what is the number, average size and average effect in terms of predicted jobs created of grants awarded since the new assisted area map was announced in Nottinghamshire to (a) companies relocating into the area and (b) companies already located in the area.

Mr. Sainsbury: The number, average size and average effect in terms of predicted jobs to be created or safeguarded of regional selective assistance grants offered on applications received since 1 August 1993 for (a) companies locating into the area and (b) companies already located in the area is, in the east midlands (a) nine, £233,888 and 77 and (b) 16, £90,103 and 31·5 and in Nottinghamshire (a) six, £316,666 and 91 and (b) five, £52,930 and 14.

Regional Assistance/East Midlands

Mr. Hoon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many companies in the Ashfield constituency employing (a) fewer than 25 people, (b) fewer than 50 people, (c) fewer than 100 people, (d) fewer than 200 people, (e) 200 or more people have been awarded (i) regional selective assistance and (ii) regional enterprise grants since the new assisted areas map was announced in 1993;

(2) how many companies in the east midlands employing (a) fewer than 25 people, (b) fewer than 50 people, (c) fewer than 100 people, (d) fewer than 200 people, (e) 200 or more people have been awarded (i) regional selective assistance and (ii) regional enterprise grants since the new assisted areas map was announced in 1993;

(3) how many companies in Nottinghamshire employing (a) fewer than 25 people, (b) fewer than 50 people, (c) fewer than 100 people, (d) fewer than 200 people, (e) 200 or more people have been awarded (i) regional selective assistance and (ii) regional enterprise grants since the new assisted areas map was announced in 1993.

Mr. Sainsbury: Regional selective assistance has been offered to one company in the Ashfield constituency, 11 companies in Nottinghamshire and 25 companies in the east midlands on applications received since 1 August 1993. Of the total for the east midlands, 11 were to companies employing fewer than 25 people. The remainder were spread over the other categories. For regional enterprise grants, the figures are 14, 38 and 68 respectively. All 68 employed fewer than 50 people.

Regional Assistance, East Midlands

Mr. Hoon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many companies in the east midlands have received grants since the new assisted areas map was announced; and what was the average size of grant in: primary production standard industrial classification division 0 and 1; manufacture of metals, mineral products and chemicals, SIC division 3; manufacture of textiles, SIC class 43; manufacture of footwear and clothing, SIC class 45; other manufacturing, SIC division 4; construction, SIC division 5; distribution, hotels and catering, SIC division 6; transport and communications, SIC division 7; banking, finance, insurance, business services and leasing, SIC division 8; and other services, SIC division 9;

(2) how many companies in the Ashfield constituency have received grants since the new assisted areas map was announced; and what was the average size of grant in: primary production standard industrial classification division 0 and 1; manufacture of metals, mineral products and chemicals, SIC division 3; manufacture of textiles, SIC class 43; manufacture of footwear and clothing, SIC class 45; other manufacturing, SIC division 4; construction, SIC division 5; distribution, hotels and catering, SIC division 6; transport and communications, SIC division 7; banking, finance, insurance, business services and leasing, SIC division 8; and other services, SIC division 9;

Mr. Sainsbury: On applications received since 1 August 1993, 93 offers of grant have been made to companies in the east midlands; 15 offers were made to companies in Ashfield. Sixty-eight of the grants offered —14 in the Ashfield constituency—were to companies in SIC divisions 3 and 4, with an average size of grant offered of £59,667—£13,601 in Ashfield. The remaining offers of grant were spread over SIC divisions 1, 2, 3, 45, 6, 7, 8 and 9, with an average size of grant offered of £26,618.

Mr. Hoon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the average size and number of regional selective assistance grants awarded in (a) Ashfield, (b) Nottinghamshire and (c) the east midlands since the new assisted areas map was announced in 1993.

Mr. Sainsbury: As only one company in the Ashfield constituency has been offered regional selective assistance, the average amount of grant offered, for reasons of commercial confidentiality, cannot be disclosed. The average grant offered and the number of offers made are: for Nottinghamshire, £196,786 and 11; and for the east midlands, £141,866 and 25.

Dounreay

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has received from the Atomic Energy Authority for plans to reprocess (a) the core fuel pins and (b) the blanket from the prototype fast reactor at Dounreay.

Mr. Eggar: The DTI has received proposals from the AEA setting out plans for the reprocessing of all remaining prototype fast reactor—PFR—fuel, including PFR breeder fuel. On the basis of these proposals, reprocessing operations are now expected to continue for between one and three years beyond the 1996-1997 closure date which was foreseen when the Government decided in 1988 that the Dounreay prototype fast reactor would close in 1994.

Konver Programme

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if it is his intention that the Cotswolds will continue to be included in the list of areas eligible for funding via the Konver programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: Under the Commission's current proposals for Konver II each member state would have to prepare a map which concentrates funding in a limited number of areas which have lost or announced losses of at least 1,000 jobs in defence activities since 1 January 1990.

The Government have made it clear to the Commission that they favour a more flexible approach which would allow each member state to decide which areas should benefit under the Community initiative.

Film Lighting

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ask the Director General of Fair Trading to examine competition in the supply of lighting equipment to the United Kingdom film industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: This is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading, Sir Bryan Carsberg, to consider directly. Any concerns that my hon. Friend has should therefore be addressed to Sir Bryan.

Cross-Media Promotion

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made in preparation of a code of practice on cross-media promotion as recommended in Mr. John Sadler's report on this subject, published in 1991.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I am pleased to announce that the newspaper and periodical industry has today published a code of practice on cross-media promotion in response to Mr. Sadler's recommendation, Cm 1436. The code, which draws on existing good industry practice, covers both the advertising and editorial content of newspapers and magazines as well as the promotion of premium-rate telephone services. It has been endorsed by the Newspaper Society, the Newspaper Publishers Association, the Periodical Publishers Association, the Scottish Daily Newspaper Society and the Scottish Newspaper Publishers Association. Copies of the code have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

Plutonium

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy on the storage of plutonium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: It is for the owners of plutonium to make arrangements for its storage and use, subject to meeting the internationally agreed guidelines for physical protection arrangements and the requirements of the international safeguards regime. The United Kingdom's civil plutonium stock is held safely and securely, principally in purpose-built stores at Sellafield. It is expected that the material will ultimately be burnt in reactors to generate electricity.

Offshore Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to impose on oil exploration licences any conditions recommended by the Joint Nature Conservation Committee.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 17 May 1994]: Where blocks are offered in sensitive areas, conditions will be attached to licences which will protect those sensitivities. As in previous rounds, these conditions will be discussed with the Joint Nature Conservation Committee and other bodies as appropriate.

PRIME MINISTER

EC White Paper

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish a White Paper setting out the economic gains and losses for EEC membership since Britain joined.

The Prime Minister: The Government's White Paper on competitiveness, to be published on 24 May, will set out the United Kingdom's approach to Europe, the benefits that that has brought, and how we can enhance the performance of the European economy as a whole.

Kashmir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 14 April, Official Report, column 264, if he has now received from the Indian Human Rights Commission its report of the incident at Bijbehara in Kashmir which took place in October 1993.

The Prime Minister: The Indian Human Rights Commission report into the incident at Bijbehara in October 1993 was published on 24 April. A copy was placed in the Library of the House of Commons on 12 May.

Correspondence

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement as to whether his office has obtained or sought to obtain a copy of the receipt and letter from the Ritz hotel in Paris referred to in the correspondence between the Prime Minister and Mr. Peter Preston, editor of The Guardian newspaper.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 13 May 1994]: I have nothing further to add to the letter sent from my office to Mr. Preston on 29 March 1994.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Police Services

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of total expenditure on police services in Northern Ireland has been deemed attributable to rate-relevant expenditure for each year since 1985.

Sir John Wheeler: The cost of policing in Northern Ireland is funded by Government from moneys voted by Parliament. However, in order to ensure that ratepayers contribute towards the cost of services which elsewhere in the United Kingdom are provided by local authorities a regional rate is struck. In striking this rate, approximately 25 per cent. of total expenditure each year on police services is deemed attributable to rate relevant expenditure.

Neurosurgical Services

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the waiting time for non-emergency neurosurgical admissions at the Royal Victoria hospital, Belfast; how many consultant neurosurgeons are employed; how many beds are available; and what are the number of operating sessions each week;

(2) what hospitals in Northern Ireland provide neurosurgical facilities.

Mr. Ancram: The number of patients and the lengths of time they have been waiting for admission to the Royal Victoria hospital's neurosurgery unit at 31 March 1994, the latest date for which information is available, are set out in the table.

Waiting times (months)	Ordinary admissions
0-2	85
3-5	43
6-8	35
9-11	33
12-14	30
15-17	6
18-20	3
Total	235

There are currently four consultant neurosurgeons employed in the Royal Victoria hospital, the only hospital in Northern Ireland which provides neurosurgical facilities.

The average number of beds available during the period 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994 was 42. In the same period the average number of operating sessions held per week was 11.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many further education colleges in Northern Ireland are to be amalgamated during 1994-95 following the publication of the Stewart inquiry; what study has been made of additional expenditure required to carry out the mergers; if that additional expenditure is expected to be met from colleges' own delegated budgets or from additional finance provided by the Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Five mergers involving 12 colleges will be implemented on 1 September 1994, reducing the total number of colleges from 24 to 17. There was no overall study on the costs to carry out the mergers; details of additional expenditure will become available following decisions made by local management. The Department of Education will continue to review the situation with the education and library boards concerned and every effort will be made to ensure that college budgets will not be adversely affected.

Education Budget

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many third level students from Northern Ireland have enrolled in universities or colleges in (a) Eire, (b) Great Britain, (c) other European Community countries and (d) other non-European countries in each year since 1984-85; and what has been the cost or benefit, in each category, to the Northern Ireland education budget.

Mr. Ancram: Available information relates to full-time undergraduate students and is as follows:

	Eire	Great Britain	Other EC[1] and non-EC
1984-85	578	5,051	—
1985-86	489	5,632	—
1986-87	462	6,185	—
1987-88	396	6,968	—

1992-93	803	10,836	11
1993-94	1,120	11,962	10

Notes:

[1] Separate data is not available.

Figures for 1993-94 are provisional.

Information on costs is not available for the years requested. However, the estimated cost to public funds during the years 1991-92 to 1993-94 for fees and maintenance awards for students from Northern Ireland attending institutions/colleges in the Republic of Ireland is as follows:

	Cost (£)
1991-92	1,530,000
1992-93	2,057,000
1993-94	3,313,000

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many third level students from (a) Eire, (b) Scotland, (c) England, (d) Wales, (e) other European Community countries and (f) other non-European Community countries enrolled in Northern Ireland universities or colleges in each year since 1984-85; and what has been the yearly cost or income, in each category, to the Northern Ireland education budget.

Mr. Ancram: Available information relates to full-time undergraduate students and is as follows:

	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94

Other non EC	270	245	341	405	484	448	405	382	352	372

Information in the exact form and covering the period requested is not available. However, the estimated cost to the Northern Ireland educational budget for fees for students from the Republic of Ireland enrolled in Northern Ireland universities/colleges during the years 1991-92 to 1993-94 is as follows:

Year	Cost £
1991-92	3,800,000
1992-93	4,500,000
1993-94	4,600,000

Accommodation Addresses

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many successful prosecutions there have been in respect of the acquisition of public sector housing for the purpose of providing an accommodation address for fraudulent social security claims and on the illegal sub-letting of such property in each year since 1985.

Mr. Tim Smith: None, since neither of these activities constitutes a criminal offence.

Stewart Report

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from teachers' organisations concerning recommendations contained within the Stewart report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Representations were invited when the report was published and three teachers' organisations responded; further representations were formally made on three subsequent occasions.

The main areas of concern have related to the effect and cost of college mergers and the level of capital and recurrent funding for the further education sector in general.

Rate Poundages

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the percentage increase during each year since 1985 in (a) non-domestic regional rate poundage, (b) domestic regional rate poundange and (c) average district rate poundage; and what is the overall percentage increase in each during that period.

Sir John Wheeler: (1) The information is as follows:

Year	Non domestic regional rate Per cent.	Domestic regional rate Per cent.	Average district rate Per cent.
1985-86	+8·07	+9·26	+5·61
1986-87	+9·43	+10·70	+9·76
1987-88	+2·85	+3·20	+4·98
1988-89	+7·98	+8·92	+4·25
1989-90	+12·63	+14·00	+2·38
1990-91	+7·39	+8·09	+5·52
1991-92	+11·55	−47·60	+9·45
1992-93	−7·39	−5·92	+6·16
1993-94	−8·61	−1·77	+3·52
1994-95	+6·22	+13·19	+2·73

(2) Overall percentage increases

	Per cent.
(a) Non-domestic regional rate	+59·3
(b) Domestic regional rate	−8·2
(c) Average district rate	+69·3

Health and Social Services

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nursing and midwifery staff, excluding agency staff, were employed by each health and social services board in each year since 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: It is for employing authorities to decide the number of nursing and midwifery staff to be employed and the appropriate skill mix to ensure the provision of a quality service to patients and clients.

The information requested is detailed in the table:

Nursing and Midwifery Staffing Levels

Board	September 1991 WTE			September 1992 WTE			September 1993 WTE
	Trained Nurses	Student Nurses	Other Nurses	Trained Nurses	Student Nurses	Other Nurses	Trained Nurses	Student Nurses	Other Nurses

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many managerial staff were employed by each health and social services board in each year since 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Figures for the managerial staff group specifically are not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost. The table shows the combined managerial, administrative and clerical staffing levels in whole time equivalents in the four board areas since 1991.

Board	September 1991	September 1992	September 1993

The intention of the HPSS reforms is to create more effective management of the services and a consequent improvement in patient client care.

Police Complaints

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will lay before Parliament copies of the annual report of the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The Commission's report for 1993, which is the sixth annual report to be produced by the Commission since its establishment in 1988, has been laid before Parliament today. It provides a detailed account of the Commission's oversight of police conduct, including the supervision of complaints against the police and the Commission's role in disciplinary proceedings once a complaint has been investigated.

It is essential that the community has confidence in the integrity of the police, and the Commission has a vital role in ensuring that complaints are fairly and properly investigated and that appropriate action is taken. Throughout the report, by providing detailed explanations of its work in investigating actual complaints, the Commission demonstrates the high standards and dedication which it applies to its task.

I am grateful to the Commission for all its work. I have no doubt that it will continue to contribute significantly to the enhancement of public confidence in the RUC. In this it has my full support.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Telephone Inquiry Service

Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many requests have been received for copies of the "Code of Practice on Access to Government Information" on the dedicated telephone line set up for that purpose; what organisations are responsible for operating the telephone inquiry and document distribution service; what required standards have been set down for timeliness of response to telephone inquiries; what is the performance of the telephone inquiry service to date; how many complaints have been received about non-delivery or late delivery of the document following a telephone request; and what has been the total cost to date of operating the service.

Mr. Waldegrave: In all, there have been some 440 calls to the inquiry service on 0345 223242 regarding the code of practice. In addition, my own office has received a further 120 calls. Copies of the code and a leaflet explaining its operation have been sent out in response.

IBM operates the service. Its contract with OPSS states that the service shall operate between 8 am and 8 pm daily; that 90 per cent. of calls received in a day—80 per cent. of calls received in any one hour—shall be answered within 10 seconds; and that 98 per cent. of all calls shall be answered within 20 seconds. The operators have consistently met their targets.

I am aware of only four complaints—less than 1 per cent. of requests—of late or non-delivery, and understand that these have now been dealt with to the satisfaction of those involved.

Dealing with open government inquiries was an addition to the existing service, which deals with inquiries on the 1994 charter mark scheme and the guide to the citizens charter second report, and as such incurred no start-up costs. The cost of responding to open government calls amounted by 12 May to £814·88—just under £2 per call. This figure includes the cost of posting material to callers.

Electronic Publishing

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his assessment of the environmental benefits that could result from the electronic publishing of (a) Government press releases and (b) other Government information instead of using paper.

Mr. Waldegrave: No assessment of environmental benefits has been carried out.

Government Information

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current income earned by the Exchequer from, or costs charged to, the Exchequer by electronic information providers who make available (a) Government Press releases and (b) other Government documents on a commercial basis as a result of contracts or arrangements for the publishing electronically of Government information by (i) the Central Office of Information and (ii) other Government bodies.

Mr. Waldegrave: In 1993-94 the Central Office of Information was able to offset the cost of distributing Government press releases by £35,186 earned from electronic information providers. The information providers made no charges to the Exchequer for this service.

During 1993-94 the Central Office of Information also earned £14,641·49 from the electronic publication of other Government documents. The information providers made no charges to the Exchequer for this service.

Income earned and costs incurred by other Government bodies are a matter for individual Departments.

Internet

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the full Internet names of the newsgroups on which the Central Office of Information makes available Government press releases and other information; and whether each of those newsgroups is available to members of the public with Internet access without additional charge.

Mr. Waldegrave: No central list is kept of the Internet names that might be accessible through the many distributors, some of them overseas, involved in handling the Hermes files of Government press notices.

All distributors charge users for access.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if his Department will instruct the Central Office of Information to make available more Government information on the Internet and bulletin board systems in order that citizens with computer and modem access can monitor Government decisions and announcements without further charges.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Central Office of Information already makes available a large amount of information on behalf of Government Departments through on-line database files Hermes and Hermes Daily. The COI is always open to representations about demand for additional information which might be made available in this way.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will examine the feasibility of setting up a Central Office of Information electronic bulletin board system covering (a) Government press releases and (b) other Government information for free public access.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Central Office of Information's Hermes database of Government press releases is already available to the public via a number of on-line services. Charges for access are determined by the database hosts. I have no plans to examine the feasibility of setting up a Central Office of Information bulletin board system for free public access.

WALES

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many parliamentary questions, in the period November 1992 to March 1993, were answered with the response that the information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost; how many were referred on to an agency chief executive; and, in each case, what percentage of the total number of questions asked this constituted.

Mr. Redwood: Based on a text search on the POLIS database, 114 parliamentary questions answered by Ministers in this Department in the period 1 November 1992 and 31 March 1993 were either given a response that the information requested was not held centrally, or that the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. This represents 6·2 per cent. of all written answers given in the same period. Five questions were referred to agency chief executives.

Housing

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his policy concerning the purchase by housing associations in Wales as part of the housing acquisitions initiative, of properties which were in the private sector as a result of earlier sale under the right-to-buy provisions.

Mr. Redwood: Under the housing acquisition initiative in 1992-93 housing associations were asked to purchase properties from the private sector, on a cost-effective basis so as to maximise the beneficial impact on the market.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how much public subsidy was involved in the purchase in 1993-94 by housing associations in Wales of properties which were in the private sector as a result of earlier sale under the right-to-buy provisions;

(2) how many houses bought by housing associations in Wales in 1993-94 had previously been owned and let for rent by local authorities and housing associations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The number of former local authority houses purchased by housing associations in 1993-94 is not available centrally.

European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether the guidance mechanism for FEOGA grants has been triggered with Wales in the current financial year.

Mr. Redwood: Reimbursement of expenditure by the Welsh Office is made, usually a year in arrears, from the guidance section of the European agriculture guidance and guarantee fund on receipt of claims from the Welsh Office for the relevant calendar year.

Schemes that attract reimbursement in this way, and the proportion of expenditure reimbursed by FEOGA, are as follows:

Hill livestock compensatory allowances, up to 25 per cent. reimbursed.

Capital grants (mainly the farm and conservation grant scheme), up to 25 per cent. reimbursed.

Receipts of £6·122 million are anticipated in 1994-95 in respect of expenditure incurred on these schemes in the calendar year 1993.

The marketing and processing projects scheme and grants for the restructuring of the inshore fishing industry are 100 per cent. reimbursed in-year. Total expenditure on these schemes in 1993-94 is planned to be £0·981 million.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) schools, (b) primary schools and (c) secondary schools there are in each county and in Wales as a whole; how many schools (i) have held ballots to decide whether or not to opt out of local education authority control and (ii) decided to opt out of local education authority control; and what was (i) and (ii) as a percentage of (a), (b) and (c) for each county and for Wales as a whole.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The data requested are given in the following tables.

General Development Orders

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to review the process of granting licences or permission to carry out developments under long-standing general development orders or interim development orders to conform with environmental safeguards introduced during the last 20 years; what representations he has received on the efficacy of such orders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The provisions of the general development order are kept under continual review. My right hon. Friend proposes to ensure that "permitted development" rights are not in breach of the habitats and environmental impact assessment directives. The Welsh Office received eight representations following public consultation on these proposals. The Planning and Compensation Act 1991 required holders of mineral permissions granted under interim development orders to apply for registration of the permissions and subsequently to apply for determination of the conditions to which the permissions are to be subject. Minerals planning guidance note 9 gives advice on the preparation and determination of such conditions, and the Welsh Office received six representations following public consultation on the draft.

Christmas Cards

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 771, how many official Christmas cards were sent out in 1993 by Ministers in his Department; and how much this cost.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 4 February 1994]: A total of 1,062 Christmas cards were sent out in 1993 by Ministers in this Department, costing £1,154·93, including postage.

I am very sorry for the long delay in answering. We were held up by delays in invoices and then the question did not receive the prompt attention that it should have.

TREASURY

Tortoise Imports

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of tortoises and tortoise products seized at ports of entry in each of the past three years; and what were the countries of origin.

Sir John Cope: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise made 57 such seizures over the period. The details for 1991, 1992 and 1993 are as follows:

Year	Number of live tortoises	Number of derived items
1991	67	44
1992	59	3
1993	37	1

It is not always possible to determine the origin of goods, although the countries of consignment of the seized items—which in most cases are likely to have corresponded with the countries of origin—were Antigua, Argentine, Brazil, Canary Islands, Colombia, Egypt, Ghana, Iran, Italy, Kenya, Lebanon, Malta, Morocco, Nigeria, Russia, Saudi Arabia, Spain, Turkey, USA and Venezuela.

Business Expansion Scheme

Sir David Madel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the total value of funds attracted to the former business expansion scheme in each year for construction-related investments; and if he will list by category how many buildings were constructed or are still under construction;

(2) how many dwellings were built in each year or are still being built, as a result of the business expansion scheme, for the provision of housing in the privately rented market.

Mr. Dorrell: Available information is in the table. This relates to BES investments in companies in the construction industry and the numbers of new lettings from investments in private renting companies.

EC Anti-Fraud Funding

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money is available from the European Commission for anti-fraud work; and how much money the British Government have claimed in cash and percentage terms for each of the past five years.

Sir John Cope: In addition to the administrative resources within the Commission, the budgetary authority allocated 139·14 million ecu, £105 million, in the 1994 budget to programmes to fight fraud. This compares with an outturn of 115·285 million ecu, £87 million, in 1993, 67·245 million ecu, £51 million, in 1992, 69·626 million, ecu, £53 million, in 1991 and 50·842 million ecu, £38 million, in 1990. The budget for anti-fraud programmes includes both funds spent directly by the Commission and funds available to member states to co-finance new controls and anti-fraud mechanisms.

United Kingdom receipts from the EC budget for anti-fraud programmes are included with other departmental receipts. This information is not held centrally. However, the United Kingdom does take advantage of Community financing. For example, following the introduction of the integrated control and administration system, some £2·9 million was claimed in 1993 to meet part of the cost of introducing a computer database to record details of areas and livestock numbers subject to support. An application for a further £4·5 million has been made for 1994. The United Kingdom has also taken advantage of the provision for computer systems in the CAP export refund area, where Customs have claimed £110,768 and £74,250 in 1992 and 1993 respectively. Customs have also applied for £248,993 for the same purpose in 1994.

Revaluations, North Kent

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) in how many cases of appeal in north Kent against the 1990 revaluation list, such appeal has resulted in an increase in the assessment;

(2) how many representations have been received since the adoption of a different basis of zoning by the Valuation Office after the new list came into force on 1 April 1990.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 3 May 1994]: The information requested is not available centrally and could be collated only at disproportionate cost.

Council Tax

Mr. Burden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many council tax banding appeals have been (a) submitted to date, (b) settled without a hearing and (c) settled at appeal.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 6 May 1994]: A total of 945,795 council tax proposals for alteration of council tax bandings in England and Wales had been received as at 31 March 1994; 107,818 have been settled without referral to the valuation tribunals and 660,384 have been referred to the valuation tribunals within six months of receipt as required by law.

Of the 660,384 appeals referred to the tribunals, 189,944 have been settled without a hearing and 2,868 have been determined as a result of a hearing.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many current and former officials and Ministers in his Department have been asked to give written or oral evidence to the Scott inquiry; and what have been the total costs to his Department of the Scott inquiry broken down by major expenditure heading;

(2) how many employees have worked on a full- or part-time basis with the Scott inquiry liaison unit set up within his Department; when the unit was established; and when its work will be completed.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 12 and 13 May 1994]: Five current or former Treasury Ministers—the Prime Minister, the right hon. and learned Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke), Lord Howe, the right hon. Member for St. Albans (Mr. Lilley) and the right hon. and learned Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor) have been asked to give written or oral evidence to Lord Justice Scott's Inquiry. Only one of these Ministers—the right hon. Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Major)—gave evidence in respect of his time as a Treasury Minister. One current Treasury official and 17 current and former officials of HM Customs and Excise have been asked to give written and/or oral evidence to the Scott inquiry. They have given this evidence on a personal basis and have not been supervised by the Department in its preparation. There is therefore no central record of the time spent or cost incurred in the provision of such evidence; serving officials prepared and gave their evidence as part of their official duties.

The direct central cost of providing evidence and information from HM Treasury to the inquiry is estimated to be £90,800 between November 1992 and March 1994. This represents the cost of staff time spent in providing information to the inquiry and the costs of photocopying and general presentation of the information. Four officials plus clerical and secretarial staff have been involved on a full or part-time basis as required. A separate liaison unit has not been created.

The total cost of Customs and Excise Scott liaison unit has been to date, £423,400 which consists of £420,000 on personnel; £2,700 on transcripts of the oral evidence, and £700 for photocopying. The Scott liaison unit in HM Customs and Excise consists of seven posts which are filled on a full or part-time basis. The unit was set up in the middle of November 1992 and its work will continue until the Department judges that it has been completed.

EDUCATION

Teacher Training

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many graduates trained as secondary school teachers at each college in South Yorkshire in the past 10 years and the subjects studied; how many new graduate teachers were employed per local authority in that time; what occupations each graduate qualifying in secondary school teaching has entered in the last 10 years; and what has been the cost of training graduate secondary school teachers in each year since 1984.

Mr. Robin Squire: Table 1 shows the number of students entering postgraduate courses at Sheffield university and Sheffield Hallam university to train as secondary school teachers in each year from 1983 to 1993. Table 2 shows the main subjects being studied for those entering such courses in 1993. Further details of individual subjects being studied in these institutions are available from the final reports of each survey held in the House of Commons Library.

Information on the occupations taken up by successful initial teacher training students is not centrally available, although an analysis carried out by the Department shows that about 90 per cent. of completers go on to enter some form of teaching within five years after qualifying. Information on the cost of training secondary school teachers is not available.

Schools (Harrogate and Knaresborough)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what has been the pupil:teacher ratio in Harrogate and Knaresborough schools in each year since 1978.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on pupil:teacher ratios in schools in Harrogate and Knaresborough is not available centrally. The overall pupil:teacher ratio for maintained schools in North Yorkshire local education authority for the years 1978 to 1993 is shown in the table.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the amount deducted for the provision of central support services by each local authority in England prior to the allocation of funds to grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: Annual maintenance grant for grant-maintained schools is calculated in one of two ways. The Government have introduced a common funding formula to fund GM secondary schools in five local education authority areas in 1994-95. This takes as its starting point the education standard spending assessment, not including the fifth sub-block which relates to services provided outside the school sector.

From this SSA-derived total, an amount is first deducted for the LEA's continuing responsibilities. Secondly, an amount is deducted for spending on primary schools, according to the relationship between the authority's spending on primary and secondary education in 1993-94. The remaining total forms the basis of allocations between all secondary schools within the area. The two deductions are shown in the table as percentages of the four schools-related sub-blocks of the SSA.

	Continuing responsibilities	Primary education
Bromley	13·79	39·16
Calderdale	12·41	45·10
Essex	17·41	39·92
Gloucestershire	20·00	40·06
Hillingdon	18·02	42·08

For GM schools not funded under the CFF, AMG consists of three separate sums. The first is what the GM school would have received under the local management of schools scheme of its former maintaining LEA. The second consists of an amount for school meals. The third is an amount for services which LEA schools receive free of charge but for which GM schools assume direct responsibility, and is a simple percentage of the first sum. The percentages applying, separately for primary and secondary schools, in 1994-95 in those LEA areas in which there are GM schools are as follows:

Notes:

1. Numbers of schools shown are of maintained primary and secondary schools, eligible for GM status, currently recorded in the DFE Index of Educational Establishment.
2. The numbers of ballots are as 10th May 1994. They may change daily.
3. A small number of schools have held more than one ballot.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children at each grant-maintained school in 1993 had a statement of special educational needs.

Mr. Forth: A table giving the number of pupils with statements of special educational needs in each of the 337 grant-maintained schools operating in January 1993 has been placed in the Library.

Funding Agency for Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if the meetings of the Funding Agency for Schools and its committees and sub-committees will be open to members of the public; if the reports discussed by the agency and its committees and sub-committees will be available to members of the public; and if he will be represented at meetings of the board.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend wrote to the chairman of the Funding Agency for Schools, Sir Christopher Benson, on 11 April setting out a framework of accountability for the agency. In that letter he made it clear that it would be for the agency itself to develop a strategy for making itself publicly accountable. My right hon. Friend has chosen not to exercise his right to be represented at board meetings at the present time.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which grant-maintained schools, under section 93 of the Education Act 1993, have been transferred from one former maintaining local education authority to another for the purpose of the calculation and recovery of annual maintenance grant by the Funding Agency for Schools; what were the local education authorities in each case; and what was the effect on the annual maintenance grant of each school concerned.

Mr. Robin Squire: Only one operating grant-maintained school has been affected by section 93 of the Education Act 1993. All Hallows RC school, formerly maintained by Hampshire local education authority, is located within the boundaries of Surrey. The Funding Agency for Schools is currently considering the basis for the determination of the school's grant for 1994-95.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Zimbabwe

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new initiatives he has taken on aid to Zimbabwe.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We will be providing £15 million of balance-of-payments assistance this financial year to support Zimbabwe's economic structural adjustment programme. In addition, we are launching a £9 million project to help strengthen Zimbabwe's health services and access to them for the poor.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution is being made or is planned by the Overseas Development Administration and the European Union to family planning work in Sierra Leone.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our bilateral contribution is approximately £0·217 million over four years via Marie Stopes International. We are also contributing £7 million in 1994-95 to the United Nations Population Fund worldwide. Its programme includes a $3·5 million programme for Sierra Leone. Our share of EC spending on family planning in Sierra Leone is approximately £80,000 over three years.

Liberia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current British and European Union distribution to humanitarian work in Liberia; and what is being done to rehabilitate child soldiers.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since 1 January 1993, we have provided more than £1·6 million in bilateral humanitarian assistance. In the same period, European Community humanitarian assistance has totalled almost £7 million.

The United Nations Children's Fund has done much towards rehabilitation of child soldiers: 133 counsellors have been trained in delivering war trauma counselling services to children; in addition, local community-based rehabilitation activities, integrated with the supply of water and sanitation and health care facilities have been established to assist demobilised child soldiers.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Attendants

Mrs. Roche: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, pursuant to his answer of 5 May, Official Report, column 601, if he will make a statement explaining why the number of attendants has been reduced.

Mr. Beith [holding answer 17 May 1994]: Following a staff inspection of the attendant grades throughout the House in 1992 and a detailed review of attendants' posts in the Serjeant at Arms' Department in the first part of 1993, the House of Commons Commission agreed that the Department's staffing level of attendants should be reduced by three. This reduction was subsequently achieved by natural wastage. The current staffing levels are being kept under review by the Department and the staff inspector will be reviewing them formally at the end of this year.

DEFENCE

Defence Accounts Agency

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultation he has undertaken over the proposal for market testing of the Defence Accounts Agency in Liverpool.

Mr. Aitken: Normal and wide-ranging consultation has taken place and regular meetings have been held with both local trade unions and staff. In addition, national trades unions, trade associations and the agency's "customers", among others, have been consulted.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultation he has undertaken concerning questions of national security in the proposal for market testing of the Defence Accounts Agency in Liverpool.

Mr. Aitken: All security considerations will be taken fully into account when reaching a decision on the proposal to market-test the Defence Accounts Agency, Liverpool.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make a decision over market testing of the Defence Accounts Agency in Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I am currently evaluating the findings of the feasibility study into the possible market test of the Defence Accounts Agency, Liverpool. I am conscious of the need to end uncertainty and I will announce a decision as soon as I am in a position to do so.

Directorate of Contracts

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what costs were incurred in moving the Directorate of Contracts from Liverpool and Harrogate to Huntingdon.

Mr. Aitken: Collocation of the related staff of the Directorate of Contracts at RAF Brampton and RAF Wyton will improve the efficiency with which the RAF's support management business is handled and follows a detailed investment appraisal. The Harrogate contracts posts are due to transfer in 1995 and the majority of the Liverpool posts in the RAF's Support Management Group in 1996. The costs incurred in these moves can be assessed only when the number of staff moving is known.

EU Security Links

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reductions in defence preparedness and defence expenditure will be made following the decision of the EU to establish closer security links with nine additional nations in eastern Europe.

Mr. Hanley: No such reductions are planned.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many parliamentary questions, in the period November 1992 to March 1993, were answered with the response that the information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost; how many were referred on to an agency chief executive; and, in each case, what percentage of the total number of questions asked this constituted.

Mr. Hanley: Based on figures available from the House of Commons POLIS system, of 1,304 written parliamentary questions answered by my Department between 1 November 1992 and 31 March 1993, full answers could not be given to 34 because of disproportionate cost or because information was not held centrally; and 29 were referred to an agency chief executive for answer.

Low Flying

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date Royal Air Force Tornadoes first carried out instrument low flying, using automatic terrain following radar, from Goose Bay, Labrador.

Mr. Hanley: In October 1983.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what facilities were provided to UK-based United States air force F111 units to maintain an instrument low flying capability prior to the establishment of the highlands restricted area.

Mr. Hanley: Prior to the introduction of the highlands restricted area in 1981 there were no facilities for flying in instrument meteorological conditions within the United Kingdom low flying system.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects US air force F15E aircraft to commence using the highlands restricted area for instrument low flying training.

Mr. Hanley: United Kingdom-based USAF F15E aircraft began using the highlands restricted area for instrument low flying training in January 1994.

Canadian Forces Base, Goose Bay

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many deployments of forward air control personnel have been made to Canadian forces base Goose Bay in each year since 1990; and what was the purpose of each deployment.

Mr. Hanley: There have been no deployments of RAF forward air controllers to Goose Bay.

Coulport Armaments Depot

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the nuclear accident exercise which took place at the Royal Naval Armaments Depot Coulport on 22 March.

Mr. Hanley: The purpose of the exercise was to test the procedures that would be employed in the unlikely event of an accident involving the reactor of a nuclear-powered submarine while berthed at RNAD Coulport. It was part of a programme of routine exercises held each year to test the effectiveness of the MOD's nuclear accident response organisation.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who are the members currently appointed to the United Kingdom Polar Medal Assessment Committee.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 28 January 1994]: To ensure that the advice from members of honours committees is fair and impartial, and to avoid lobbying of members, it is Government practice not to publish details of the composition of committees responsible for the awards of honours. This particular committee is made up of a small group of scientists and academics associated with work in the Arctic and Antarctic.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who are the members currently appointed to the National Employer Liaison Committee.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 28 January 1994]: Members of the National Employers Liaison Committee for the Reserve Forces are as follows:

Sir Alexander Graham, GBE (Chairman)
Sir Michael Angus
Professor J. S. Bridgeman
Sir Dermot de Trafford, Bt
Mr. A. J. Gooding, OBE
Mr. F. C. Graves, OBE

EMPLOYMENT

Workfare

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what evaluation he has made of the options for introducing a workfare system for unemployed people aged between 18 and 24 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: "Workfare" is usually taken to mean large-scale, all-embracing compulsory work schemes. The Government do not believe that there can be a single approach to meeting the needs of unemployed people and therefore they reject "workfare" schemes. The more effective approach is to target the individual needs of particular groups and help them back into work. That is why the Government introduced in April two new pilot schemes designed to help 18 to 24-year-olds who have been unemployed for over a year to get back to work. The pilots are: Workwise, a four week personal development and jobsearch course; and 1-2-1, a series of individual advisory interviews. Both pilots are mandatory for people who have declined all other offers of help.

Film Industry

Mr. Nichlas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently employed in the United Kingdom film industry.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest reliable information is from the 1991 census of employment. In September 1991, there were 24,200 jobs in the United Kingdom in film production, distribution and exhibition—activity heading 9711 of the 1980 standard industrial classification.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what steps he is taking to improve the training of technicians within the United Kingdom film industry;

(2) how many trainees are currently undergoing apprenticeship courses related to the skills of technicians in the film industry; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is his policy on the maintenance of the technical skills base for the British film industry;

(4) what assistance is made available by Her Majesty's Government for training technicians for the film industry.

Miss Widdecombe: Oversight of training in the broadcast, film and video industry is the responsibility of Skillset, the recognised industry training organisation. In partnership with the Open university, Skillset has already developed nine national vocational qualifications at levels 2 to 4 covering camera, lighting and sound, and is working with the BBC, ITV and training and enterprise councils to implement them.

The results of a joint Employment Department and Skillset project on training needs in the industry will be announced at ITV Network in London on 19 May 1994. Officials will be working closely with Skillset on their implementation. We are already supporting an industry database of information on training courses.

There are currently 60 trainees on a film and television scheme. I am also hoping that the film industry will shortly be developing, with Government support, a modern apprenticeship model scheme to include technician training for introduction in September 1995.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library a copy of the undertakings sought from training and enterprise council secondees in (a) England and (b) Wales, in relation to the obligation to retire early, for those civil servants applying for his Department's voluntary early retirement scheme.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 13 May 1994]: There is no specific form of undertaking to place in the Library. Regional directors were instructed that training and enterprise council secondees would qualify for early retirement only if they intended to return to the Department at the end of their secondment. Secondees were required to confirm their intention in writing and our guidance required our regional offices to send a letter to the TEC telling it of the secondee's intention to return to the Department at the end of their secondment.

Unemployment Benefit

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in each region were in receipt of unemployment benefit only (a) in total and (b) who had been unemployed for more than six months at the latest available date.

Miss Widdecombe [pursuant to her reply, 12 April 1994, c. 57]: I regret that my reply to the hon. Lady of 12 April was incorrect. The information requested is available for Great Britain, and is given in the following table. The figures relate to 11 November 1993.

Number of Unemployed Claimants

	Receiving Unemployment Benefit only	Receiving Unemployment Benefit only for more than 6 months (thousands)
South East	148	56
East Anglia	17	5
South West	37	13
West Midlands	47	19
East Midlands	33	12
Yorkshire and Humberside	44	13
North West	52	17
North	34	10

ENVIRONMENT

Single Regeneration Budget

19. Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been allocated to the east midlands in the first year of the new single regeneration budget; and how much was allocated to the same areas under the urban programme over each of the last five years.

Sir George Young: Planned expenditure in the east midlands through the single regeneration budget in 1994-95 is £68 million. Under the urban programme, the east midlands was allocated £11·4 million in 1989-90, £11·5 million in 1990-91, £11·7 million in 1991-92, £11·2 million in 1992-93 and £7·5 million in 1993-94.

Air Pollution

20. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to reduce harmful levels of air pollution.

Mr. Atkins: The quality of air in the United Kingdom is generally good and it is improving. Our recent discussion paper "Improving Air Quality" set out for consultation proposals for maintaining and extending this improvement.

Greenhouse Gases

21. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the currently envisaged time scale for the stabilisation of emissions of greenhouse gases.

Mr. Atkins: Under the United Nations framework convention on climate change, the United Kingdom and other developed countries are committed to taking measures aimed at returning emissions of greenhouse gases to 1990 levels by 2000. The adequacy of the convention's commitments is due to be reviewed by the conference of parties to the convention in 1995 and again by 1998.

Local Government Finance

22. Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of the local authority associations to discuss capping regulations.

Mr. Curry: The local government associations have made representations on capping on a number of occasions during the course of the annual cycle of consultations on the local government finance settlement.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of local authority revenue accounts is received from central Government grants; and what were the comparable figures for 1980-81 and 1986-87.

Mr. Curry: Comparable figures are not available at an England-only level for years prior to 1981-82.

The available information is as follows:

England	[1]Revenue Expenditure £ million	[2]Government Grants £ million	Government Grants as percentage of Revenue Expenditure
1981-82	20,106	11,234	56
1986-87	26,630	13,402	50
[3]1993-94	42,654	23,582	55

[1]In 1981-82 and 1986-87 local authority expenditure is taken to be "relevant expenditure" plus expenditure on certain non-relevant items such as net expenditure on mandatory student awards. It represents spending to be financed by rate support grant, relevant specific grant, rates and balances. This measure of expenditure is net of sales, fees and charges, interest receipts etc. For 1993-94 local authority expenditure is "revenue expenditure to compare to TSS" which is expenditure to be met from revenue support grant, specific and special grants inside Aggregate External Finance, Non-Domestic Rates, council tax and appropriations from reserves.

[2]In 1981-82 and 1986-87 Government Grants comprise Aggregate Exchequer Grant and Rate Rebate Grants. In 1993-94 Government Grants included Revenue Support Grant, Specific and Special Grants in Aggregate External Finance, Council Tax Benefit Grant and Council Tax Transitional Relief Scheme Grant.

[3]Budget data.

Local Government Contracts

23. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many councils he has instructed to re-tender for contracts in the last three years.

Mr. Baldry: Twelve councils have been required to re-tender 14 contracts since January 1991.

M25

24. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards the development of motorway service areas on green-belt land adjoining the M25 motorway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Approval should not be given for a motorway service area within a green belt except in very special circumstances.

Deregulation

25. Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his Department's contribution to the deregulation programme.

Mr. Curry: My Department is taking substantial deregulation action to reduce unnecessary controls on business while maintaining environmental standards and public safety. We have identified several repeals and simplifications, two of which are included on the face of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill and others which are suitable for the general power if enacted. We have also indentified several changes in secondary legislation. We are also taking administrative action aimed at clarification and simplification of bureaucracy, particularly in integrated pollution control and waste management.

Mineral Planning Guidance

26. Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the new opencast guidelines, MPG3, will be published.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Morley and Leeds, South (Mr. Gunnell) earlier today.

Beaches

27. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the cleanness of beaches.

Mr. Atkins: Under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, local authorities are under a duty to keep amenity beaches, down to high water mark, clear of litter and refuse. The Tidy Britain Group has surveyed the amenities and cleanliness of all British resort beaches and will shortly publish a league table to highlight which are the best and which are the worst.

Tower Hamlets Council

28. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has instituted into the way in which Tower Hamlets council is run.

Mr. Curry: None. Its internal management arrangements are a matter for the local authority working within the statutory framework.

Homelessness

29. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to bring forward proposals to change the current homelessness legislation.

36. Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to bring forward proposals to change the current legislation regarding local authority obligations in respect of housing the homeless.

Sir George Young: I hope to announce the Government's conclusions before the summer recess.

Radiation

30. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new proposals he has to reduce the public's exposure to radiation.

Mr. Atkins: It is already the Government's policy that exposure of the public to radiation from man-made sources should be as low as reasonably achievable, economic and social factors being taken into account.

Environment Agency

31. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to establish the United Kingdom Environment Agency.

Mr. Atkins: The Government are committed to establishing an Environment Agency for England and Wales and a Scottish Environment Protection Agency as soon as possible. Paving provisions were announced in the Queen's Speech and we will introduce a Bill shortly.

Construction Industry

32. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific steps he is taking to lift burdens of over-regulation from the United Kingdom construction industry.

Mr. Baldry: The Government are taking substantial deregulation action to reduce unnecessary controls on the construction industry in the United Kingdom. We have identified several repeals and simplifications, such as the proposed changes to building regulations and waste regulations, which are included in the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill. We are also responding positively to the recommendations on construction set out in "Deregulation Task Forces—Proposals for Reform".

Subsidiarity

33. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to apply the principle of subsidiarity to local government.

Mr. Curry: The Government have consistently made clear their commitment to the principle of subsidiarity, both between central and local government and beyond; subsidiarity does not stop at the local authority but continues to whatever level is most consistent with competence, practicality and cost-effectiveness.

River Doe Lea

34. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to ensure that the River Doe Lea is cleaned up.

Mr. Atkins: The National Rivers Authority is responsible for ensuring that river quality is protected and for dealing with water pollution problems.

Water Privatisation

35. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department is taking to monitor the effects of water privatisation.

Mr. Atkins: Since their privatisation in 1989, the monitoring of water and sewerage companies in England and Wales has been the responsibility of the Director General of Water Services, who has a duty to ensure that the companies can finance and carry out their statutory water supply and sewerage functions. He is also responsible for the protection of customers' interests, ensuring that services are provided economically and efficiently, and facilitating competition. The director general publishes an annual report which is presented to Parliament.

Local Authority Services

37. Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is being taken to improve the quality of local authority services.

Mr. Curry: As part of the citizens charter initiative, local authorities are required, starting this year, to publish details of their performance against a wide range of performance indicators. For the first time, citizens will be able to make effective judgments about the quality of services provided by their local council compared to other local authorities of a similar background, and over successive years. Many local authority services are also subject to compulsory competitive tendering. This has led to better services at lower costs, and CCT is now being extended to a wide range of further services, including housing management, legal, finance, IT, personnel, architectural, engineering and property management services.

Local Authority Capital Receipts

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the total accumulated local authority housing capital receipt from the sale of council housing in England at 31 March, by local authority and by Department of the Environment region;

(2) what is the projected total accumulated local authority housing capital receipts at 31 March 1995, by local authority and by Department of the Environment region.

Sir George Young: The total discounted values of all council dwellings sold between April 1980 and December 1993, as reported by each local authority in England, are in the table. The information shown includes reported data on receipts from large-scale voluntary transfers. No estimates have been made for those periods where data have not been supplied by a local authority or were incomplete. Actual cash receipts for the period will depend on the extent to which sales had been financed by loans from the authorities. Data are not yet available for the period January to March 1994.

No estimates are available by local authority or by Department of Environment regions of projected capital receipts during the calendar year 1994 or the financial year 1994-95.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 3 May, Official Report, column 443, what guidelines his Department issues in relation to quality and technical competence when contracts are being considered by Government Departments for work which was formerly undertaken by the Property Services Agency.

Sir George Young: The DOE issues a range of relevant guidance, dealing with the contracting process, standard forms of contract, managing building works, client requirements for Government office buildings, the special needs of historic buildings, and how fire standards and precautions should be approached. When selecting contractors and consultants for particular works projects, Departments have access to computerised DOE pre-qualification systems that assess the technical and financial standing of contractors and consultants seeking Government work. The Treasury's central unit on procurement has also issued guidance on particular aspects of works procurement, including quality assurance and the selection of works contractors.

Housing Subsidy

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authorities have a negative housing subsidy entitlement.

Sir George Young: We have not yet received all the first claims from local authorities for the current financial year. However, from the claims received up to now—excluding the 30 authorities which have conducted large-scale voluntary transfers of their stock, the following authorities have indicated that they will have an overall —negative entitlement to housing revenue account subsidy in 1994-95:

Crawley
Dacorum

Daventry
Forest Heath
Isles of Scilly
Mid Bedfordshire
North Dorset
Runnymede
South Northamptonshire
St. Edmundsbury
Stratford-on-Avon
Tandridge
Wansdyke
West Oxfordshire

All claims are subject to revision and to external audit validation.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authorities have a negative housing entitlement for housing revenue account subsidy purposes in the latest financial year; and what is the cash value of this negative entitlement.

Sir George Young: We have not yet received all the first claims from local authorities for the current financial year. However, from the claims received up to now—excluding the 30 authorities which have conducted large-scale voluntary transfers of their stock—290 authorities have indicated that they will have a negative entitlement on the housing element of their housing revenue account subsidy. In total this amounts to £889,671,987. All the claims are subject to revision and to external audit validation.

As soon as I have complete list of the authorities and the sums involved I will write to the hon. Member with the details.

Local Government Staff

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people served on (a) rural, (b) urban, (c) borough and (d) metropolitan county boroughs and county councils in 1964; and how many currently serve on (i) district, (ii) London borough, (iii) county and (iv) other councils.

Mr. Baldry: In 1964 the numbers of councillors in England and Wales were:

	[1]Numbers
Rural districts	14,633
Urban districts	9,368
County boroughs	5,056
Metropolitan boroughs	1,738
Municipal boroughs	8,445
Counties	5,346
Parish councils (England only)	57,000

[1] Separate figures for England and Wales are not available.

In 1994 the numbers of councillors in England are:

	Numbers
District councils	13,459
London boroughs	1,914
County councils	2,998
Metropolitan districts	2,481
Parish councils	71,600

In 1994 the numbers of councillors in Wales are:

	Numbers
County councils	502
District councils	1,475

Figures are not available for councillors serving on community and town councils in Wales.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of (a) housing association tenants on assured lettings and (b) secure housing association tenants were in receipt of (i) full housing benefit and (ii) partial housing benefit on 31 March 1993, and at any subsequent date for which figures are available.

Sir George Young: An estimated 60 per cent. of housing association tenants on assured lettings and also 60 per cent. of secure housing association tenants were receiving housing benefit in 1993. A breakdown between full and partial benefit is not currently available.

The proportions are provisional estimates from the "Survey of English Housing" for the period April to December 1993.

Rent Assessment Panels

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total cost of administering rent assessment panels in the last year for which figures are available.

Sir George Young: The provisional figure for cost of the rent assessment panels in England for 1993-94 was £5,446,000.

Council House Sales

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of council houses sold to tenants of Harrogate borough council.

Sir George Young: Harrogate borough council has reported the sale of 2,300 dwellings to sitting tenants between April 1980 and December 1993. Information is not available on the number of these sales before 1980-81.

Living-over-the-shop Initiative

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority (a) the address, (b) the date of approval by his Department's officials, (c) the overall scheme cost, (d) the date of withdrawal, (e) the level of subsidy, (f) the date of completion and (g) the letting date of each completed property for which a supplementary credit approval has been agreed under the LOTS—living-over-the-shop—initiative since its inception.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 17 December 1993, Official Report, column 1097. Details of the allocation of 1993-94 flats-over-the-shops supplementary credit approvals will not be available until the final claims have been received from local authorities. They have six months after the end of the financial year in which to submit claims.

Eco-labelling

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been spent in the United Kingdom on setting up and running the Eco-Labelling Board; how many products have received an eco-label; and how many items of each labelled product have so far been sold.

Mr. Atkins: Total expenditure, to date, in setting up and running the United Kingdom Eco-labelling Board amounts to £1·7 million. This expenditure covers the costs of setting up the board, promoting the scheme nationally, assisting the European Commission in developing ecological criteria and processing applications from United Kingdom manufacturers.

To date, the eco-label has been awarded to seven models of washing machine in Hoover's "New Wave" range. We do not have any information on the number of eco-labelled products sold.

Waste Water Treatment Directive

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to identify sensitive areas as required by the urban waste water treatment directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Following discussions with appropriate bodies, the Secretary of State for Wales and I have today placed in the Library of the House, a map of the 33 areas in England and Wales that we have identified, on advice from the National Rivers Authority, as sensitive areas on the basis of the eutrophic status—SAs(E). We have also placed in the Library a list of these areas along with the sewage treatment works at which the installation of phosphorus removal plants will be required in SAs(E) by the end of 1998 in accordance with the directive. These decisions will make a significant contribution to safeguarding our fresh waters.

We have accepted the NRA's advice that further monitoring is needed in the case of at least 20 other sites to establish whether they meet the criteria for identification as SAs(E). We have also concluded that current data do not support the case for the identification of nine other candidate SAs(E) proposed by the NRA, and that, before reaching a decision in these cases, further monitoring should be carried out. These cases, along with the 20 areas recommended by the NRA, will be reviewed within the four-year period prescribed by the directive. A list of these areas has also been placed in the Library of the House.

The map and lists will also be available for inspection at NRA headquarters and their main regional offices.

Mr. Richard Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to identify high natural dispersion areas, less sensitive areas, as required by the urban waste water treatment directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Following discussions with appropriate bodies, the Secretary of State for Wales and I have today placed in the Library of the House a map showing those areas in England and Wales which we have identified as high natural dispersion areas. The map shows all 58 areas around the English and Welsh coastline which the National Rivers Authority has advised meet the criteria in the directive. On the basis of available information, the NRA believes that the provision of primary treatment for the named discharges into these areas will be sufficient and that no further environment benefit will accrue from the provision of additional levels of treatment. We have accepted this advice.

Comprehensive studies will now be carried out at each location. The NRA must be satisified, before they issue a discharge consent, that the study demonstrates that the proposed discharge of primary treatment effluent will not adversely affect the environment.

The NRA is also preparing maps defining the outer boundaries of estuaries as required by the directive. In all cases except for the Humber, the Severn and Swansea bay the boundaries are the same as those used by the NRA for other purposes.

Our decisions will ensure that sewage discharges are properly treated; that the quality of our coastal waters and estuaries will continue to improve, and that costs to water charge payers are kept within acceptable limits.

The map will be available for inspection at NRA headquarters and their main regional offices.

Waste Deposits, London

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what records are kept, and by whom, concerning toxic or other chemical waste deposits on former industrial sites in the Greater London area.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is not held centrally. It is for the owner of any site to decide what records to hold in order to meet its needs or legal obligations. It is for public authorities—including, in particular, the London waste regulation authority, London borough councils and the Common Council of the City of London—to decide what records to hold in connection with the exercise of their pollution control or planning powers, which could impinge on the type of site described.

Energy Conservation Bill

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many amendments and new clauses tabled at report stage of the Energy Conservation Bill were drafted by parliamentary counsel.

Mr. Atkins: Seven new clauses and 216 amendments tabled at Report stage of the Energy Conservation Bill were drafted by Parliamentary Counsel.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many hours of civil servants' time, and at what cost, was spent in drafting amendments and new clauses to the Energy Conservation Bill.

Mr. Atkins: This information is not available. Civil servants carried out work on the Bill in the course of their normal business and no records are kept of the time spent on individual tasks.

Housing Management

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of whether authorities which will be restructured following the local government review will have sufficient time to implement the compulsory competitive tendering of housing management.

Sir George Young: I am keen that local authorities in the shires should press ahead with their preparations for housing management CCT without delay. Where they can, authorities should let contracts before reorganisation. Where they cannot, their preparatory work will not be wasted but will stand restructured authorities and their tenants in good stead.

However, as I said in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 15 December 1993, Official Report, columns 733-34, I recognise that restructured authorities will need some extra time to complete the competition process. In my answer, I confirmed the arrangement whereby such authorities will benefit from an exemption of 18 months following reorganisation to complete the first round of competitive tendering. This should give most authorities sufficient time, having regard to the time that their predecessors will have had to prepare.

Some restructured authorities may, nevertheless, have difficulty in completing the process in the 18-month period. I have therefore decided to extend the exemption to 24 months in certain limited circumstances. The authorities which will benefit from this extension will be those which inherit more than 1,000 dwellings from an outgoing authority which is below the proposed de minimis threshold—and does not, therefore, have to prepare for housing management CCT—and those with a total housing stock of more than 15,000 dwellings. This extension will be granted automatically to restructured authorities meeting one or both of those criteria.

Nitrates

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the designation of nitrate-vulnerable zones under the EC nitrate directive.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friends the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for Wales and I issued today a consultation document giving details of the areas in England and Wales which it is proposed to designate as vulnerable zones under the terms of the EC nitrate directive. Following proposals from the National Rivers Authority, 72 zones, with a total area of about 650,000 hectares, have been identified in accordance with criteria laid down in the directive.

The designation that we are proposing represent the latest stage in a broad package of measures that the Government are taking to control nitrate pollution from agriculture. Four years ago, we established 10 nitrate sensitive areas and we expect to open a further 22 such areas to applicants very shortly. At the national level we have already anticipated the requirement in the nitrate directive to publish and promote a code of good agricultural practice to help farmers reduce nitrate pollution in water. The Government also maintain a substantial programme of nitrate research and development which helps to provide the basis for a comprehensive range of advice to farmers on sensible nitrate practice through such publications as the Ministry of Agriculture's fertiliser recommendations. A fully revised and updated edition of this publication will be available next week.

The designations that we are proposing today reflect the fact that the problem of nitrate pollution in England and Wales is largely confined to a number of discrete areas. In due course the directive requires us to introduce measures in these areas to control certain agricultural activities with the aim of reducing nitrate pollution. Considerable care has been taken to ensure that the zones are as precise as possible, thereby ensuring the measures will be effectively targeted and produce the desired environmental benefit. The consultation document provides a preliminary indication of the type of measures that might be introduced in the zones.

The measures must be established by December 1995 and come into effect at a date to be decided between then and the end of 1999. The resulting reductions in nitrate leaching in vulnerable zones will add to reductions already taking place because of recent changes in agriculture and voluntary application of the code of good agricultural practice for the protection of water issued by MAFF and Welsh Office Agriculture Department.

I am placing copies of the consultation document in the Library.

Council Tax

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what criteria it is determined whether a property occupied by a disabled person should receive a one-band reduction for the purposes of assessing council tax payments.

Mr. Curry [holding answer 16 May 1994]: Disabled persons may be entitled to a one-band reduction in council tax if they need extra rooms or more space as a result of their special needs. Reductions apply to dwellings where any one of the following special features is present; an additional kitchen or bathroom, or special room required because of a resident's disability, or extra floorspace where a wheelchair is required to be used indoors. Reductions are determined in accordance with The Council Tax (Reductions for Disabilities) Regulations 1992, SI 1992/554.

Benzene

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding levels of benzene in vehicle exhaust emissions.

Mr. Atkins: I have received several representations, from hon. Members and others, about the benzene content of petrol and levels in vehicle emissions.

Community Charge

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of changes to the community charge register in England and Wales in the latest available year; and what was the estimate of the level of under-registration for the community charge.

Mr. Curry: This information is not available centrally. However, the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy has published an estimated percentage turnover on the community charge register in England and Wales for 1992-93 in the results of its "Revenue Collection Statistics 1992/93 Actuals" survey published in January 1994. From a response of 305 out of 403 local authorities in England and Wales, CIPFA gives an estimated percentage turnover on the community charge register for England and Wales of 34 per cent. This represents the total number of additions to, plus deletions from, the register in the period 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993, expressed as a percentage of the number on the register at 1 April 1992.

HEALTH

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 20 April, Official Report, column 541, regarding trusts failing to meet their capital return targets, by what percentage and sum each such trust failed to meet its three financial targets.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested for the years 1991-92 and 1992-93 will be placed in the Library. Information for 1993-94 will not be available until the annual accounts of trusts for that year have been audited.

Cosmetic Surgery

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many surgeons have been struck off the British Association of Cosmetic Surgeons register in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the British Association of Cosmetic Surgeons.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what qualifications are required for a person to carry out a liposuction operation.

Mr. Sackville: It is not illegal for an unqualified person to perform cosmetic surgery procedures as such, as long as that person does not falsely claim to be a doctor or carry out any procedures without the patient's permission.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints her Department has received related to liposuction surgery in each of the past five years.

Mr. Sackville: In the year ending 30 April 1994 there have been three complaints; in the four preceding years there were none.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received alleging negligence during liposuction surgery.

Mr. Sackville: None. Complaints of medical negligence are a matter for the General Medical Council.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to regulate the advertising of cosmetic treatment by private cosmetic surgeons.

Mr. Sackville: Restrictions on advertisements are already in force and regulated by the Advertising Standards Authority and the Office of Fair Trading.

HIV/AIDS

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment she has made of the effect of changes in NHS funding in respect of the voluntary sector, with particular reference to groups assisting those with HIV/AIDS;

(2) what asssessment she has made of the effect of changes in local authority funding on voluntary groups assisting those with HIV/AIDS.

Mr. Sackville: National health service funding for HIV and AIDS increased from £214 million in 1993-94 to £225 million in 1994-95, and local authority funding from £14·9 million to £15·4 million. Changes in allocating these funds came into effect only from 1 April. It is too soon to assess any effect that this may have on the voluntary sector.

Health Education Authority Publications

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which Health Education Authority titles have been withdrawn from circulation.

Mr. Sackville: The Health Education Authority has withdrawn "Your Pocket Guide to Sex" in the light of ministerial advice.

Obsessive Compulsive Disorder

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made by her Department of the provision of services for people suffering obsessive compulsive disorder; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: It is for each district health authority to decide what range and type of services to provide based on their assessment of local needs. This will include services for people suffering from obsessive compulsive disorders.

Immigration Control

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for increased medical checks or medical screening on people subject to immigration control and travellers entering United Kingdom airports and ports for the detection of tuberculosis, cholera and typhoid; who will be subject to these measures; on what basis people will be chosen; what diseases or conditions will be checked; under what authority these checks will be made; what will be the outcome for persons found to be suffering from any of the prescribed conditions or diseases; what changes there will be in statutory instruments and immigration rules; and what co-operation there has been with the Home Office on the immigration implications of increased screening and checks.

Mr. Sackville: Current policy is that new immigrants from countries with a high prevalence of tuberculosis entering the United Kingdom for six months or more are screened for tuberculosis. The aim of this policy is not only to identify those with active disease so that they can be referred for further investigation and treatment, but to be able to offer the protection of BCG immunisation where appropriate. The Department, in consultation with the Home Department and within the remit of the inter-departmental working group on tuberculosis, is reviewing the procedures in order that the policy may be more effectively implemented.

The Department has no plans to screen travellers or new immigrants to the United Kingdom for cholera or typhoid.

Breast-feeding

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to increase the amount spent on promoting breast feeding; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health continues to support breast-feeding as the best way of feeding a baby. Spending on the promotion of breast-feeding, including grant aid to voluntary organisations, publicity, surveillance and research, reached £118,000 in 1993-94 and is expected to increase to £125,000 in 1994-95.

Hospitals, London

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of, and how many, patients treated in London teaching hospitals had their main place of residence outside Greater London in the last year for which figures are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information is not available in the precise form requested.

Caesarean Births

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each year for the last 10 years the number of Caesarean births.

Mr. Sackville: The estimated figures for England for the years 1982 to 1985 and 1988-89 to 1991-92 are shown in the table. These figures relate to deliveries in hospitals and not to the number of babies born.

Data are unavailable for the years 1986 to 1987-88 because of changes to the data collection system.

Year	Estimated Number of Deliveries	Estimated Number of Caesarian Section	Percentage by Caesarian Section
1982	574,620	58,110	[1]10·1
1983	578,300	58,370	[1]10·1
1984	586,110	59,140	[1]10·1
1985	605,120	63,270	[1]10·5
1988-89	642,000	64,000	[2]10·0
1989-90	643,000	77,000	[2]12·0
1990-91	659,000	86,000	[2]13·0
1991-92	649,000	84,000	[2]13·0

Newly Qualified General Nurses

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses completed their registered general nurse qualification in 1993; and how many of them are now employed by the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: The number of admissions from England to the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting register for the period 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993 is shown in the table. The total figure represents an increase of 3 per cent. on the previous year.

	Number
Part 1—First level nurses trained in general nursing	15,042
Part 12—First level nurses trained in adult nursing (Project 2000)	635
TOTAL	15,677

Information relating to nurses qualifying in particular years and employed by the national health service is not available centrally.

Wandsworth Health Authority Chairman

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the yearly salary of the chairman of Wandsworth health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is £19,285.

Junior Doctors

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of measures taken to reduce hours worked by junior hospital doctors in each year since 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney: Annual figures, since 1991-92, for the central funds spent on measures to reduce junior doctors' hours of work are shown in the table. Action taken includes creating 750 extra senior doctor posts and other local projects to reduce hours and improve living conditions.

Year	£
1991-92	6,202,000
1992-93	24,466,000
1993-94	37,048,000
1994-95	50,015,000
TOTAL	117,731,000

Note: Figures at cash for each year.

In addition, authorities and trusts will have devoted their own funds to local measures to reduce hours. Information on the level of such local funding is not available centrally.

In Vitro Fertilisation

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many health authorities purchase IVF treatment;

(2) what plans she has to ensure that those health authorities which are currently not purchasing IVF treatment are able to offer the same service to patients as those health authorities which have decided to purchase IVF treatment.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the number of health authorities that provide IVF treatment is not available centrally.

The national health service provides a wide range of treatments for sub-fertility. Decisions about the resources to be made available for these services must be left to individual health authorities as they are in the best position to determine priorities in the light of local needs and circumstances. Advice is available to health authorities and clinicians in two publications drawn to the attention of the national health service in 1992:

(a) The Effective Health Care Bulletin on management of subfertility, published for the NHS Management Executive by a consortium of Leeds and York Universities and the Research Unit of the Royal College of Physicians.

(b) The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists publication "Infertility—Guidelines for Practice".

Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Stomach Ulcers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were treated for stomach ulcers in each of the last three years; and what percentage of these patients were treated with maintenance therapy.

Mr. Sackville: The information shown in the table relates to finished consultant episodes where the primary diagnosis was for gastric ulcer. Details of medication given to individuals are not available centrally.

Year	Number
1989-90	24,717
1990-91	23,469
[1]1991-92	24,075

[1] Preliminary estimate.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research her Department has undertaken into the cause of stomach ulcers and the link with the bacteria helicobacter pylori;

(2) what research her Department has undertaken into the use of triple therapy through the use of antibiotics as a means of treating stomach ulcers.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health has not undertaken any research on either topic.

The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The MRC is an independent body deciding what research to do on its own expert judgment. The council is always willing to consider for support soundly based new scientific proposals in competition with other applications.

In 1992-93 the MRC spent £1·44 million on research into the gastro-intestinal tract, and a further £9 million on research which may have some relevance to the gastro-intestinal tract.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the NHS drugs bill is accounted for by the prescribing of Tagamet and Zantac; and how much the NHS spends on these drugs per year.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information cannot be published in the form requested because of commercial confidentiality.

Market Testing

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for City of Chester (Mr. Brandreth) of 18 April, Official Report, column 396, what areas have been selected for internal charging; what system of charging is proposed; and how the transaction costs of internal charging will be allocated.

Mr. Sackville: The Department's internal management consultancy unit's services were fully internally charged from 1 April 1993 and the unit competes with commercial management consultancy firms. In addition, for a number of services now contracted out, such as printing and travel, expenditure is charged out within the Department to the point of consumption. For services being market-tested, and any provided to other Government Departments or executive agencies under service level agreements, a system of overhead allocation has been developed. The Department is considering further developments in internal charging in areas where this makes management sense, and where the benefits of introduction clearly outweigh the costs of implementing and maintaining the internal charging systems.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for City of Chester (Mr. Brandreth) of 18 April, Official Report, column 396, what was the outcome of the market-testing programme for 1993-94.

Mr. Sackville: The Department's 1993-1994 market-testing programme runs from October 1993 to September 1994 and was published in the citizens charter second report 1994, copies of which are available in the Library. To date the following market tests have been completed:

Reprographic service on the London estate—contract awarded to Libra Business Services.

Building management in certain Department of Health buildings—contract awarded to Procord Facilities Management.

Survey of infant feeding practices—contract awarded to Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for City of Chester (Mr. Brandreth) of 18 April, Official Report, column 396, what areas the market-testing programme for 1994-95 will cover; and what are the personnel consequences.

Mr. Sackville: The Department will shortly be agreeing its 1994-1995 programme with the efficiency unit of the Cabinet Office.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures similar to those in his answer to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock) of 25 January, Official Report, column 186, on unemployment benefit, showing the value of income support for a couple with two children under the age of 11 years giving figures for April and using estimates for April prices.

Mr. Burt: The available information is in the table. It shows that, since 1988, the level of income support as a proportion of full-time adult earnings has fallen but that its value in real terms has risen. In the period covered by the table, average earnings have risen faster than prices. Similar information on supplementary benefit is not readily available.

	Total is	Average real value of benefit at April 1993 prices over the period	Equivalent value of benefit at April 1993 prices at date of uprating	As a percentage of all adults average earnings

Notes:

1. Source: Abstract of Statistics for Social Security Benefits and Contributions and the Indices of Retail Prices and Average Earnings; Social Security Statistics.
2. Earnings are derived from the Employment Departments New Earnings Survey estimates of all adult, full time, earnings.
3. Real value comparisons have been made using the Retail Prices Index of all items excluding certain housing costs (ROSSI).
4. Income Support was introduced in April 1988. Estimates for entitlement to Supplementary Benefit (which was replaced by Income Support) are difficult as assessment varied with personal circumstance. For example, in addition to the ages of any children, household status, accommodation type, health and other factors were all relevant.

Benefit Statistics

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish estimates of the average numbers receiving benefits at any one time on the same basis as table 6 of the Social Security departmental report giving figures for (a) 1993-94, (b) 1994-95, (c) 1995-96 and (d) 1996-97.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table.

Figures are shown in thousands (000s)

The forecasts are based on economic and unemployment assumptions published in the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the estimated costs in 1994-95 and 1995-96 of increasing disregarded earnings for housing benefit purposes for single people to £10 per week and for couples to £25 per week; and how many claimants would benefit from such a change.

Mr. Hague: The cost in 1994-95 is estimated to be £120 million and would benefit some 370,000 claimants. There is insufficient information to calculate figures for 1995-96.

Source:
The reply is based on the Family Expenditure Survey data from 1989, 1990 and 1991, uprated to 1994-95 prices and caseloads. Figures are rounded down to the nearest £10 million and 10,000 cases.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the estimated costs in 1994-95 and 1995-96 of reducing the housing benefit taper to 50 per cent.; and how many claimants would benefit from such a change.

Mr. Hague: The estimated cost in 1994-95 is £730 million and it is estimated that 1,955,000 housing benefit recipients would benefit from such a change. Figures for 1995-96 are not available.

Source:
Estimate uses data drawn from the 1989-90-91 Family Expenditure Surveys and modelled at 1994-95 prices and benefit levels. Costs are rounded to the nearest £5 million and numbers of claimants rounded to the nearest 5,000.

Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions he or Ministers in his Department or their parliamentary private secretaries had with the hon. Members who tabled amendments for consideration at the Report stage of the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill prior to and following the tabling of those amendments.

Mr. Lilley: My ministerial colleagues and I meet hon. Members from time to time on matters relating to our departmental responsibilities.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the answer of 12 May, Official Report, columns 212-13, on what date the Minister for Disabled People authorised his Department to instruct Parliamentary Counsel on the drafting of the amendments tabled to the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill by five hon. Members on 3 May.

Mr. Scott: On 20 April 1994, I authorised my officials to instruct Parliamentary Counsel to draft amendments.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many absent parents whose cases were taken on by the Child Support Agency during 1993-94 were on income support; of these how many were (a) exempt from the £2·20 deductions made from income support in lieu of child maintenance, (b) subject to the £2·20 deductions; and how many of the maintenance assessments calculated using the child support formula issued by the end of March were (i) nil assessments, other than those for absent parents on income support and (ii) minimum assessment of £2·20 a week, as opposed to deductions from income support.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 17 May 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about benefit deductions.

Not all of the information you have requested is available. To the end of March 1994, 40,446 assessments involved cases where the absent parent was in receipt of income support.

I understand that for the quarter ending 28 February 1994, the Benefits Agency had made deductions from income support in 16,413 cases.

In addition to those cases involving an absent parent on income support, a further 6,981 assessments resulted in the absent parent being assessed as unable to pay more than the minimum contribution which is now £2·30.

I am sorry that this reply is not more helpful.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases dealt with by the Child Support Agency in 1993-94 the alleged absent parent disputed paternity; how many of these cases have been resolved without reference to court and in how many of these paternity was established; how many disputed paternity cases have been referred to court by the agency; how many cases have been heard to date and in how many paternity has been established by the court; and how many disputed paternity cases are unresolved to date.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Adan Ingram, dated 17 May 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about disputed paternity cases. I am grateful to you for raising the matter of disputed paternity again as I was about to write to you on the subject, following further information which has now come to light.

When I wrote to you on 31 March in response to Question 1482, Official Report column 1026, I inadvertently provided incorrect figures. I am sorry that the information quoted, which was based on computerised information, was not accurate. We are undertaking immediate action to rectify the error.

The current position based on clerical checks is that from April 1993 to the end of March 1994, the absent parent disputed paternity in 3,006 cases. Of these, 657 cases were resolved without reference to court and 80 were withdrawn as paternity investigations were progressing. Information is not available on the establishment of paternity in those cases which were resolved without reference to the courts.

At the end of March 1994, 2,269 cases remained to be resolved and some 23 cases have been referred to the courts but none has yet completed a full hearing.

I hope this reply is helpful and I apologise again for providing incorrect information earlier.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many section 18 and section 17 reviews of child support officers were requested during 1993-94; how many of each were outstanding at the end of the financial year; in how many of those resolved in each case the decision had been revised; and what is the average number of weeks that the outstanding reviews have been awaiting decison in each Child Support Agency centre.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 17 May 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about child support reviews.

Not all of the information you have requested is available. I can however tell you that during 1993-94 the Agency processed 20,211 Section 17 reviews. The assessment was revised in 19,952 of those. I am also able to provide you with some of the information about Section 18 reviews. During 1993-94 there were requests for 25,013 such reviews of which 13,281 were cleared leaving 11,732 reviews outstanding.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the maintenance application forms issued by the Child Support Agency during 1993-94 have been issued to (a) non-benefit claimants, (b) family credit claimants, (c) new income support claimants and (d) existing income support claimants; and how many have been issued to absent parents.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 17 May 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the issue of maintenance application forms.

During the period from April 1993 to the end of March 1994, a total of 858,000 maintenance application forms were issued. Of these, 29,600 were issued to clients who do not receive any of the prescribed benefits; 223,800 were issued to parents with care in receipt of either Family Credit or Disability Working Allowance; 320,400 were issued to new and repeat applicants for Income Support and 284,200 were issued to parents with care in receipt of Income Support before 5th April 1993.

Information is not recorded on the number of application forms issued to Absent Parents.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 31 March, Official Report, column 1026, if he will make a statement on the relationship between deductions from earnings orders issued by the Child Support Agency by the end of February and the number of accounts in arrears.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 17 May 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the deductions from earnings orders which have been issued by the Child Support Agency, and the number of client accounts in arrears.

I regret that validated data on accounts in arrears is not currently available. The Child Support Computer System is being upgraded to provide additional information. The Agency had however issued an estimated 1,400 deductions from earnings orders by the end of February 1994.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the maintenance assessments issued by the Child Support Agency during 1993-94 were interim assessments; how many of these interim maintenance assessments have been subsequently replaced by final maintenance assessments, and how many interim assessments remained in force at 31 March; whether the final maintenance assessment for cases where an interim assessment is originally made appears in the monthly Child Support Agency statistics as another assessment made, and whether the monthly statistics could differentiate interim and final assessments; and when he will be able to give a breakdown of the number of category A interim assessments and category B interim assessments.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 17 May 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about interim maintenance assessments.

From April 1993 to the end of March 1994, 73,300 interim maintenance assessments were issued, of which 25,000 were converted to final maintenance assessments. 48,300 interim maintenance assessments remained in place at the end of the period. A breakdown of these figures by category is not available.

When an interim assessment is included in statistical reports it is excluded on conversion to a full maintenance assessment. Total assessments reported for statistical purposes therefore refer to the number of cases where initial assessments have been made.

Information on the number of interim maintenance assessments issued will be included in future monthly reports placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 31 March, Official Report, column 1025, regarding the Child Support Agency, in how many section 6 cases the issue of the requirement to co-operate has been considered by the Child Support Agency during 1993-94; in how many of these cases he agreed that the parent with care need not be required to co-operate; in how many of these cases the agency accepted that there was a risk of harm or undue distress, and what was the range of other reasons accepted for not requiring co-operation; how many parents with care subsequently gave the authorisation or information; how many reduced benefit directions were issued in 1993-94; and when the agency will begin to monitor the number of applicants who have given authorisation but subsequently seek to withdraw it.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 17 May 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the requirement to co-operate.

During the period April 1993 to March 1994, the requirement to co-operate was considered in 64,800 cases. After investigation, good cause not to co-operate was accepted in 31,700 cases. Of these, 8,400 were cases where the parent with care was unable to name the parent of the child; 15,800 were cases where there was a risk of violence and 7,500 were cases where other reasons such as emotional distress, mental illness or concern for the welfare of the child were accepted. After interview, 14,200 parents with care subsequently provided their authorisation or the necessary information.

In the same period, 627 Reduced Benefit Directions were referred to the Benefits Agency for implementation.

The Agency keeps its management information systems in this area under review. At this stage there are no firm plans to record routinely the number of applicants who provide authorisation and subsequently withdraw it.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judicial Appointments

Mr. Richards: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what steps he has taken to implement the proposals for developing judicial appointments procedures which were announced by the Lord Chancellor in his speech to Her Majesty's judges on 7 July 1993.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has today published a consultation paper, "Developments in Judicial Appointments Procedures". The paper outlines the proposed arrangements for openly advertised competitions which he intends to hold later this year to fill vacancies arising in 1995-96 for circuit and district judges. Copies of the consultation paper have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The Lord Chancellor invites comments on the proposals which he has put forward in the consultation paper, further copies of which may be obtained from his Department.

The closing date for responses is 30 June 1994.

TREASURY

Multilateral Debt

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy towards the creation of special drawing rights at the international financial institutions as a means of lessening the multilateral debt problems of the world's poorest countries.

Sir John Cope: The articles of the IMF prescribe that allocations of special drawing rights should be made to address global liquidity shortages. No such shortages exist at present and, in the Government's view, the case for a general allocation has not therefore been made.

The world's poorest countries are eligible for and receive financial assistance on concessional terms from the international financial institutions, particularly through the IMF's enhanced structural adjustment facility and the World Bank's International Development Agency's credits. The agency's fifth dimension facility also assists the poorest countries with loan repayments. Net financial flows from the institutions to the poorest countries remain substantially positive.

International Monetary Fund

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals in regard to the cost of environmental protection he put to the interim committee of the International Monetary Fund during its discussions on the new World Trade Organisation at its meeting in Washington DC on 25 April; and if he will place in the Library a copy of the United Kingdom submission to the interim committee.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A number of different issues, including the World Trade Organisation, were covered by those who spoke at the interim committee on 25 April. In my speech to the committee I warned against protectionist trading practices establishing themselves under the guise of legitimate environmental concerns.

Full texts of my speeches to the interim committee and development committee have been deposited in the Library of the House.

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many individuals received tax relief on private medical insurance premiums paid by employers on behalf of employees whose earned income including benefit is less than £8,500 a year for each of the past five years in (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland; and what was the value of tax relief on private medical insurance premiums paid by employers on behalf of employees whose earned income, including the value of benefits is less than £8,500 a year for each of the past five years in (i) England, (ii) Scotland, (iii) Wales and (iv) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Dorrell: As I said in reply to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) on 8 March 1994, Official Report, column 99, this information is not available.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) of 15 March, Official Report, columns 571-72, what was the expected revenue yield from premium tax in 1994-95 and 1995-96 on private medical insurance.

Sir John Cope: The expected revenue yield from insurance premium tax on private medical insurance is estimated to be approximately £10 million in 1994-95 and £50 million in 1995-96. This includes both insurance paid for by households, included in "Medical and other" in the answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling), and insurance paid for by companies, included in "Other business" in that answer.

Consultants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the expenditure on management and financial consultants by his Department in 1992-93.

Sir John Cope: The Treasury's computer systems do not distinguish between management and financial consultants.

The Treasury's expenditure on consultants for 1992-93 was £2,430,405 exclusive of VAT.

VAT (Education) Order

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the individuals and bodies consulted (a) before the drafting and (b) during the drafting of the VAT (Education) Order 1994; and what response was received.

Sir John Cope: The VAT (Education) Order was initiated by an internal review of the current VAT exemption by Customs and Excise. At that stage consultation was limited mainly to officials within that Department and the Department for Education. The first draft of the order was published as part of the public consultation document issued by Customs last December and publicised by a press release. About 500 copies of the consultation document were issued to a variety of bodies with interests in the educational sector including local authorities, trade and professional associations, accountancy firms, charities and individual education and training providers.

Most of the responses supported the need for change, but many expressed concerns and made proposals for extending the new exemption better to preserve the status quo. The final draft of the order was modified to reflect a great many of these useful comments.

Council Tax

Mr. Burden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to monitor the time being taken to (a) inspect properties where householders have submitted council tax appeals and (b) schedule appeals for hearings.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 9 May 1994]: Together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, I am keeping under close review the progress being made by the Valuation Office Agency and the valuation tribunals in the settlement of council tax appeals and we expect 80 per cent. of cases to be cleared by the end of 1994.

Monthly returns of clearance are received in order to monitor progress, but there are no plans to monitor the time taken to inspect properties and to schedule appeals for hearings during the clearance process.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total rent income received by registered housing associations and the proportion of total rental income of registered housing associations which is met by payments of full and partial housing benefit, for the year to 31 March 1993 and for any subsequent period for which figures are available.

Sir George Young: The total rental income, including service charges, for housing associations registered with the Housing Corporation for 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993 was £1·621 billion.

Information on the proportion of total rental income met by housing benefit is not available.

Council Tax

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the cost to local authorities of collecting the council tax in each London borough;

(2) what is the cost of collection of council tax in each local authority;

(3) what was the amount collected in 1993 by each London borough and local authority through the council tax.

Mr. Curry: I have arranged for this information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Sewerage

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's policy regarding the use of twin-wall plastic piping products for sewerage use.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the sewerage undertakers.

Fire Safety, Harrogate

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many premises were inspected for compliance with fire safety regulations by staff of the Harrogate borough council in each of the last three years.

(2) how many inspectors are employed by Harrogate borough council to check on fire standards.

Mr. Baldry: The responsibility for compliance with the provisions of the fire safety regulations made under the Fire Precautions Act 1971 rests with fire authorities, in this case North Yorkshire county fire authority. Building control and environmental health officers employed by Harrogate borough council will, however, be involved in inspections with regard to fire safety matters under other legislation. the number of such officers is a matter for the council, and figures are not collected centrally. Likewise the number of premises inspected by these officers is not collected centrally.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the revenue from capital receipts, by London borough, for each financial year from 1988-89 to 1993-94.

Mr. Curry: Total capital receipts were as follows:

Local authority capital outturn returns. 1993-94 figures from local authority third quarter forecasts.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total amount of gross capital expenditure by all local authorities in each year since 1980-81 at (a) cash prices and (b) constant prices.

Mr. Baldry: The available information is shown in the table:

Local authority gross capital expenditure: England

Local Government, Cleveland

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 11 May, Official Report, column 170, what are the particular circumstances in Cleveland which permit a change in the structure of local government to precede local elections.

Mr. Curry: In announcing his decisions on the future structure of local government in Cleveland on 18 January my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment made clear his intention to consult the majority and minority groups on each of the four district councils and the county council about whether or not elections should be held in May 1994 with the intention of establishing the four new unitary authorities in April 1995. However, because of the judicial review case brought by Cleveland county council, it proved impossible for us to lay an order providing, inter alia, for elections to be held in May this year.

Therefore we again sought the views of the majority and minority groups on the relevant local authorities and, in the light of their comments, we decided that the most practicable arrangement would be for the new unitary authorities to be established in April 1995 followed by elections in May 1995.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with the Environment Commissioner concerning the effect of the exclusion of the Lappel Bank mud flats from the Medway estuary special protection area on the negotiations with him in relation to the Cardiff bay barrage proposal and its legal status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Ivory

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning any resumption of trade in ivory.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend has received a large number of letters on this issue. The present ban on trade in ivory was introduced following the seventh conference of the parties of the convention on international trade in endangered species in Lausanne in 1989. We have made it clear that the United Kingdom would not be prepared to consider supporting any relaxation of the ban without first being satisfied that this could be done without undermining the conservation status of the African elephant.

We are aware of a South African Government proposal to seek agreement to the resumption of a limited trade in meat and hides only, in relation to the elephant population in their country, with the possibility of extending this to ivory at some point in the future. Before any such a proposal can be considered by the CITES conference of the parties it will have to be examined by a CITES panel of experts whose conclusions we would also take into account, together with the views of African elephant range states and other parties. We understand that the relevant CITES procedures are being put in hand. We shall certainly wish to examine the proposal and its implications with great care.

Water Bills

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what he expects prospects for water bills to be after the announcement by the Director General of Water Services on water pricing policy.

Mr. Gummer: At present average annual charges for water are around £200 per household—about 55p a day to provide high quality drinking water in unlimited amounts and to treat our sewage. The Director General of Water Services is currently reaching a view on new limits on the extent to which the companies may increase their prices over the next 10 years. He is to announce these on 28 July. He has said that he hopes that nationally it may be possible to limit overall price increases on average to between 0 and 2 per cent. above the rate of inflation. This will supersede the current average ceiling of 4 per cent. above the rate of inflation. In setting price limits he intend to assume that improvements in service are generally financed from efficiency gains, that companies will be able to deliver existing services at lower prices and that companies can both increase the efficiency of their capital programmes and finance them at a lower return on capital. This will have a significant impact on the increases in bills required to finance new obligations. In this way my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have sought to secure best protection of the environment in a cost-effective way.

Radioactive Waste

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if radioactive waste management policy will be considered as part of the nuclear review.

Mr. Gummer: In parallel with the nuclear review, details of which were announced today by my hon. Friend the Minister for Energy, my Department will be heading a separate but complementary review of radioactive waste management policy.

The radioactive waste management review will examine current policy in the light of changes which have taken place since the Department published its national strategy in 1984. It will range wider than the nuclear industry—covering radioactive waste management as a whole. It will not address the suitability of specific sites, this being a matter for the planning and regulatory process, or the merits of the operation of existing nuclear power stations or those in the pipeline.

The Department proposes to publish its preliminary conclusions later in the summer, as a basis for consultation.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will also be issuing for consultation a revision of the Department's 1994 publication "Disposal facilities on land for low and intermediate level Radioactive Wastes: principles for the protection of the human environment".

In parallell with this latter exercise, the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee, together with the Advisory Committee on Safety at Nuclear Installations, will be asked to consider the approach to site selection for disposal facilities and the criteria for ensuring the protection of human health. Further details will be announced later.

Security Facilities Executive Agency

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what targets he has set the Security Facilities executive agency for 1994-95.

Sir George Young: For 1994-95, the following targets have been set for the agency. All of them require the agency to make further improvements in its performance.

Category	Measure	Target
Financial	Outturn on the Vote	A surplus of £1·86 million
	Outturn on Net Running Costs	Break even
	Cost Recovery in Accruals Terms	100 per cent. cost recovery including 6 per cent. return on capital
Sales	Sales Turnover	A sales turnover of £42 million
Efficiency	Unit Costs	0·5 per cent. reduction in real terms
Quality of Service	Regular Customer Surveys	80 per cent. rating of customer responses in good or higher categories
Environment	Vehicle Fuel Efficiency	Annual average of 24·5 mpg for the GCS and IDS fleets

Traffic Growth

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the implications for traffic growth of location of (a) companies and (b) retail outlets on sites adjacent to the M25; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My Department has made no detailed assessment in the form suggested.

Planning policy guidance notes 4—Industrial and Commercial Development—6—Town Centres and Retail Developments—and 13—Transport—are all relevant. They seek to encourage new development in locations which minimuse the length and number of trips by vehicles, and protect and enhance the viability and vitality of existing centres—in both urban and rural areas—by offering a range of everyday community, shopping and employment opportunities.

PPG13 also asks local planning authorities to ensure that trunk roads and other through routes, including bypasses, serve their purpose as corridors of movement and do not have their national and strategic role undermined by development which encourages their use for short local trips. The Secretary of State for Transport has the power to direct local planning authorities to refuse applications for planning permission, or to apply specified conditions, and takes the policy in PPG13 into account in deciding whether to do so.

WALES

Water Pricing

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what agreements his office made during 1989 on the pricing structure of (a) Welsh Water plc and (b) Severn Trent Water plc in relation to an accrual of money for infrastructure purposes; what accrual is estimated to have occurred since then; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The agreements reached at privatisation between the Government and all water companies are published in the pathfinder prospectus—a copy of which is held in the Library of the House.

This matter has since become the responsibility of the Director General of Water Services.

Tuberculosis

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total number of notifications of tuberculosis in each year between 1987 and 1993.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is given in the following table:

Notification of Tuberculosis in Wales

Year	Number
1987	232
1988	201
1989	209
1990	194
1991	166
1992	201

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the number of deaths from tuberculosis in each year between 1988 and 1993.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of deaths of Welsh residents from tuberculosis in each year are shown in the table:

	Tuberculosis (all forms) excluding late effects (ICD 010-018)	Late effects of tuberculosis (ICD 137)
1988	35	19
1989	26	16

Junior Hospital Doctors

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the cost of measures taken to reduce the hours worked by junior hospital doctors in each year since 1991-92.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Central funds provided for the reduction in junior doctors' hours in Wales have amounted to the following:

	£ million
1991-92	0·250
1992-93	0·600
1993-94	1·000

Details of the costs which health authorities and trusts have incurred in addition to the above are not available.

National Curriculum

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration he gave to using the recommendations of the Curriculum Council for Wales as the basis for the new National Curriculum for English Order; for what reason the recommendations of the National Curriculum Council for England were selected; what representations he has received regarding the order; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: On 31 March the Curriculum Council for Wales submitted revised proposals for English and suggested two amendments to reflect, firstly, the distinctive literary heritage of Wales and, secondly, the diverse linguistic backgrounds of pupils in Wales. My right hon. Friend considered the recommendations carefully and responded on 14 April, asking the new Curriculum and Assessment Authority—ACAC, which replaced the Curriculum Council for Wales on 1 April—to proceed to consultations. A copy of the correspondence is contained in the proposals for English issued for consultation by the authority: this is available in the Library of the House. My right hon. Friend has asked the authority to report to him on the outcome of the consultation in Wales and to make final recommendations in the light of that consultation by 30 September. My right hon. Friend will consider carefully the authority's further report and recommendations in the autumn with a view to making a new order for English jointly with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education.

Health Service Administration

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of total health expenditure in Wales was spent on (a) managerial, (b) administrative and (c) clerical costs in each year since 1991-92.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The percentages of total health expenditure in Wales spent on managerial, administrative and clerical costs in 1991-92 and 1992-93 were as follows:

		Per cent.
	1991-92	1992-93
Managerial	1·0	1·0
Administrative and Clerical	4·8	4·6

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what proposals he has to make disability living allowance more accessible for those with learning difficulties;

(2) what proposals he has to make access to disability living allowance more equitable for those with a mental illness.

Mr. Scott: None. Entitlement to disability living allowance depends on the care and mobility needs arising from a particular condition, rather than on the condition itself. Access to DLA is available to all disabled people through the claiming process. The Benefits Agency provides support services to assist people in making a claim.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the length of time that those seeking review of refusal of disability living allowance have to wait before a hearing at a tribunal.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested. Reviews of entitlement to disability living allowance are not dealt with at a tribunal hearing.

People who are dissatisfied with the decision given on their claim for benefit may ask for it to be reviewed by an independent adjudication officer. Following this review, if they remain dissatisfied, they can then appeal to an independent appeal tribunal.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Television Licences

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will meet members of the Retired Members Association of the Transport and General Workers Union to discuss the cost of television licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I do not think a meeting would serve any useful purpose. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State has written to the hon. Gentleman to explain why the Government are not prepared to introduce free or concessionary television licences for retirement pensioners, as called for by the association at its recent conference.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many parliamentary questions, in the period November 1992 to March 1993, were answered with the response that the information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost; how many were referred on to an agency chief executive; and, in each case, what percentage of the total number of questions asked this constituted.

Mr. Brooke: In the period November 1992 to March 1993 411 questions were tabled to my Department. Of these, two questions were answered that the information was not held centrally and four were referred to agency chief executives.

Each of these figures represent less than 1 per cent. of replies given in the same period.

Royal Parks

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will give a breakdown of his Department's estimated £23·8 million expenditure for 1994-95 on the Royal Parks Agency.

Mr. Sproat: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Royal Parks Agency under its chief executive, Mr. David Welch. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from David Welch to Ms Marjorie Mowlam, dated 13 May 1994:

The Secretary of State for National Heritage has asked me to reply to your Question about estimated expenditure of the Agency in 1994-95. Details of the Department's Voted provision are published in the Supply Estimates 1994-95, Class XI, and may be obtained from the Library of the House. The breakdown of the provision for the Royal Parks Agency is shown on Vote 6, Section C of Class XI (pages 34 and 35).

Identification Cards

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received regarding the use of identification cards at sporting events.

Mr. Brooke: None.

Tourism

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what was the outcome of the informal EU Council of Ministers tourism meeting on 13 April:

(2) who represented the United Kingdom at the informal EU Council of Ministers tourism meeting on 13 April:

Mr. Sproat: The United Kingdom was represented by the head of my Department's tourism division and the United Kingdom tourism representative from Brussels. Meetings of this kind offer an opportunity for a purely informal exchange of views on matters of common interest. They have no powers to make decisions and the Council guidelines stipulate that such meetings should not reach formal conclusions. There were wide-ranging and useful discussions on subjects which included the future direction of European Union tourism policy, the tourism action plan and tourism statistics.

Library Services

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the names and terms of reference of the consultancies he has commissioned to inquire into the operation of library services.

Mr. Sproat: Set out is a list of consultancies currently in progress, together with their respective terms of reference:

1. The Aslib Consultancy.
Review of public library service in England and Wales.
To assess the scope and value of public library services currently provided by local authorities in England and Wales; to draw up guidelines and a framework for local choice for what should constitute a "comprehensive and efficient service" provided by a modern public library service; to consider the desirability of any changes in the requirements of the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964; and to identify key developments requiring national attention.

2. Broadvision Communications Limited.
Evaluation of Library and Information Plans (LIPs).
To provide an independent evaluation of the concept and process of Library and Information Plans, their planning, funding, development, implementation and impact on the library and information sector.

3. Coopers and Lybrand.
Review of schools library services.
To carry out a review of the schools library service in the light of the growing trend towards the delegation of the funding for the service to schools. The review will examine three sets of issues: resource allocation and delegation; the marketing of the services; and structural and internal management.

4. Brenda White Associates Limited.
Provision of secretariat and support services for the Libraries and Information Services Council (England) working party on library services for children and young people.
The Council has established the working party to:

(i) examine the library needs of children and young people and the extent to which they are being met by existing services and levels of staffing;
(ii) examine the way in which library services for children and young people are provided through the public library service, school and further education libraries, and the school library service;
(iii) review recent research and development work into library services for children and young people, and assess its effectiveness and impact on services;
(iv) examine the effect of external change on the library needs of children and young people and on library services for them;
(v) recommend improvements, and how to bring them about, in library services for children and young people.

5. KPMG Peat Marwick in association with Capital Planning Information Limited.
Investigation into the scope for contracting out in public libraries.
The Department of National Heritage, in conjunction with five pilot projects established by library authorities in England, is examining the scope for contracting out the direct delivery of all or some elements of the public library service. The consultants are assisting by developing the overall framework of the investigation and evaluating the lessons to be learnt from the pilot projects, which remain under the direction of the authorities concerned. After consulting widely on the lessons that emerge from the pilot projects and ensuring that all public library authorities are kept in touch with the exercise, the consultants will prepare a report showing whether all or parts of the public library service can be contracted out; and the advantages and disadvantages of so doing, including best options, costings and potential savings.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Royal Mail, Barnsley

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many full-time and part-time employees Royal Mail intends to employ at the Barnsley depot in (a) 1994-95, (b) 1995-96 and (c) 1996-97.

Mr. McLoughlin: The intended number of employees at Royal Mail depots is an operational matter for the Post Office.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the number of full-time and part-time employees at the Barnsley Royal Mail depot in (a) 1991-92, (b) 1992-93 and (c) 1993-94.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that the numbers of full-time and part-time employees at the Barnsley Royal Mail depot were:

Year	Full-time	Part-time	Total
1991-92	137	62	199
1992-93	126	71	197
1993-94	119	80	199

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if Royal Mail intends to continue with two foot deliveries of mail per day in the Barnsley area for the foreseeable future.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that it has no plans to change the mail service specification in the Barnsley area for the foreseeable future.

Appropriation Accounts

Mr. Mudie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the 14 companies which went into receivership or liquidation in 1992-93 and caused £5,096,000 to be written off in the appropriation accounts 1992-93, class IV, vote 1.

Mr. Sainsbury: In the 1992-93 appropriation accounts class IV, vote 1, the losses of £5,096,000 under regional development grants and regional selective assistance schemes involved 14 cases and 12 companies. A list of the 12 companies follows:

Winchmore Knitting Factory Ltd.
Blue Ridge Care Ltd.
Northern Power Electronics Ltd.
Thermostar (UK) Ltd.
Great Northern Knitwear
Tolag Products and Company Ltd.
Swilynn Magnetic Industries Ltd.
City Vehicle Engineering
CBS Batteries Ltd.
Danum Windows Ltd.
Briquette Technology Ltd.
Unibit (Holdings) plc

Mr. Mudie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will break down the miscellaneous expenditure listed under section I, international trade in class IV, vote 2, of the appropriation accounts 1992-93.

Mr. Needham: A breakdown of the miscellaneous international trade expenditure listed under class IV, vote 2, section I of the 1992-93 appropriation accounts follows:

	£000
Overseas project fund expenditure to assist companies with the costs of pursuing major projects overseas	4,990
Assistance to overseas marketing research	1,181
The single European market campaign	2,918
International exhibitions: British participation at the Universal Exposition held in 1992 in Seville and the exposition in 1993 in Taejon, South Korea	7,131
Publicity and promotions for the British Overseas Trade Board's (BOTB) range of overseas trade services and other export promotion activities	3,598
Assistance to BOTB area-advisory groups and other non-official trade associations.	2,563
Other expenditure	2,773
Class IV, vote 2, section I total	25,154

Mr. Mudie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will name the company included in the losses statement in class IV, vote 2, of the 1992-93 appropriation accounts where his Department paid off the debit incurred by the Expo '92 concessionaire.

Mr. Needham: The company is Lionheart Catering Ltd., which was struck off the register by the Registrar of Companies on 5 January 1993 and dissolved by notice in the London Gazette dated 12 January 1993.

Spirit Measures

Mr. Riddick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to introduce regulations permitting the use of a 35 ml spirit measure; if he will explain the reason for the delay in the introduction of the regulation; and to what extent such a delay is reconcilable with the Government's deregulation drive.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) on 10 May 1994, Official Report, columns 76-77.

Underwater Pipelines

Mr. David Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made by the interconnector working party; when it is likely to report; what are the expected volumes; and to what extent the Government remain committed to open access and published tariffs as the basis of the interconnector project.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom-continent gas interconnector is a private sector project being developed by a group of seven oil and gas companies to build a pipeline linking the United Kingdom and Belgian gas grids. The Government welcome the widespread interest from potential users in participating in this strategic link and the progress being made towards a commitment this year to go ahead. The development of the commercial arrangements for the interconnector is a matter for the companies involved.

Mr. David Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to seek a resolution of the issue of jurisdiction before agreeing any new treaty relating to a cross-median sub-sea pipeline; what effect he expects the pending ratification of the law of the sea convention to have on these matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Government believe it is important to resolve the application of jurisdiction to submarine pipelines crossing the continental shelf boundary between the United Kingdom and Norway if such projects are to be considered. The Government have taken no decision about accession to the United Nations law of the sea convention.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he is considering seeking arbitration at the International Court of Justice to clarify the position with regard to jurisdiction over sub-sea pipelines crossing the United Kingdom-Norwegian line.

Mr. Eggar: I can confirm that we are considering the option of seeking arbitration to clarify the application of jurisdiction to submarine pipelines crossing the continental shelf boundary between the United Kingdom and Norway.

Frigg Treaty

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress is being made towards re-negotiation of the Frigg treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Progress has been made in a number of the areas under discussion with the Norwegian Government. The negotiations to revise the Frigg treaty are complex, however, and raise difficult issues for both Governments which it will not be easy to resolve.

I do not as a result envisage that it will be possible to complete negotiations with the Norwegian Government within the foreseeable future.

Small Firms

Mr. Burns: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the number of responses and entries to the 1994 SMART—small firms merit award for research and technology—competition.

Mr. McLoughlin: The 1994 small firms merit award for research and technology competition generated 6,360 responses and a record 1,494 entries.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Mr. Waterson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will publish a White Paper on the conclusions of the GATT Uruguay round; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: The Government have today published a White Paper "The Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations 1986-94". Copies have been placed in the Library of the House and will be available in the Vote Office.

The Government warmly welcome the successful conclusion of the Uruguay round. It is something for which we have worked tirelessly over many years.

Liberalisation of international trade has always been one of the most effective means of boosting world growth. An OECD/World bank study has cautiously estimated that world annual output will be boosted by over US$270 billion after 10 years as a result of the agreement.

The results should offer great benefits to British business and consumers. As the fifth largest exporter in the world of goods and commercial services, the United Kingdom stands to be one of the biggest gainers from cuts in trade barriers world wide.

Major reductions in tariffs will provide substantial benefits to exporters through improved access to overseas markets. For example, in the sectors where tariff barriers are to be eliminated by the EC, Japan, the United States and Canada, the United Kingdom is well placed to make gains in those markets.

Cuts in the EC's own tariffs should lead to lower prices and wider choice for consumers. Consumers and taxpayers will also benefit from the reductions in farm subsidies and agricultural trade barriers which the round will bring. These represent an important basis for further liberalisation in future.

Inclusion of services and trade related intellectual property rights for the first time within the multilateral trade rules is particularly important. The Government pressed for these subjects to be included in the preparations for the round in the mid 1980s. Services already account for 23 per cent. of United Kingdom trade, and trade in services is growing faster than trade in goods. The general agreement on trade in services will provide a more secure basis for the future growth of this trade to the benefit of United Kingdom service providers and the economy more widely.

The agreement on trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights—TRIPS—is also a major achievement which will provide better international protection for innovative products from the United Kingdom and help to reduce tensions over trade in counterfeit goods. Stronger trade rules in areas such as subsidies, safeguards and anti-dumping will increase the stability and effectiveness of the multilateral trade system.

Creation of the World Trade Organisation itself puts the system on a permanent institutional basis. The new dispute settlement system should help ease trade tensions and reduce the scope for unilateral trade sanctions.

Trade liberalisation is a continuous process and no trade agreement can settle every trade dispute. But the completion of the Uruguay round represents an enormous achievement in which the world has chosen trade liberalisation rather than protectionism. The conclusions of the round provide a secure basis for future expansion of world trade and the growth and prosperity which go with it.

Nuclear Review

Mr. Yeo: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the terms of reference for the nuclear review.

Mr. Eggar: I am now in a position to announce the terms of reference, timing and format of the nuclear review. This answer has been agreed with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, who has responsibility for the nuclear power generating industry in Scotland.

The Government believe that the future role of nuclear power in the United Kingdom's electricity supply will depend on it proving itself competitive while maintaining rigorous standards of safety and environmental protection.

The coal review established that there is a sound economic basis for continuing to operate existing nuclear stations. The nuclear review will not consider whether Sizewell B should be brought on stream. Sizewell B is on course to start operating this year, subject to the receipt by Nuclear Electric of such consents as are required by law. Decisions on these consents are matters for the appropriate Ministers and authorities and are not matters for the review. The review will, however, take into account the decisions made on Sizewell B, whether the consents are granted or refused.

The nuclear review will focus on the future prospects for nuclear power. It will examine the economic and commercial viability of new nuclear stations in the United Kingdom, against the background of the Government's energy policy as set out in the White Paper "The Prospects for Coal", Cm. 2235.

The Government have asked the nuclear generating industry to make the commercial case for new nuclear generating capacity and to make that case publicly available. Whether any new nuclear station could be built with private sector finance will be a key test of that case. The Government would welcome comments on the industry's case, which will be published shortly.

The Government also invite submissions from interested parties on whether new nuclear power stations offer particular diversity, security of supply and environmental benefits or disadvantages.

The review will examine possible options for introducing private sector finance into the nuclear industry. As part of this, the Government are prepared to consider without commitment representations on whether privatisation would in principle be feasible, and what a practical timescale might be. The review will address the question of how best to manage the substantial nuclear waste and decommissioning liabilities which are currently the responsibility of the public sector, so as to secure value for money for the taxpayer while ensuring necessary safety and environmental standards are met.

The review will also assess the existing arrangements to enable the full costs of nuclear power in the United Kingdom to be met, taking account of the Trade and Industry Committee's recommendations on the fossil fuel levy in its report, "British Energy Policy and the Market for Coal," HC 236.

Submissions on these issues should be made in writing both to my Department and the Scottish Office, to be received by 30 September. All substantive submissions received by the Government will be made publicly available. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of this House and of the House of Lords. Commercially confidential information in submissions received by the Government, internal papers and advice and reports internal to Government, and advice from external advisers will not be made publicly available in this way.

The review will be undertaken by the Department of Trade and Industry and the Scottish Office Industry Department, in consultation with other Government Departments as appropriate. The Government may appoint consultants to advise it on matters relevant to the review as the need arises.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is announcing today a separate review of radioactive waste management policy, to be conducted in parallel with the nuclear review.

Wind Turbine, Orkney

Mr. Wallace: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals have been put forward for the decommissioning of the 3MW wind turbine at Burgar hill, Orkney; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 18 May 1994]: No arrangements have been made for decommissioning as the future of the turbine is still being considered.

EDUCATION

Disabled People

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what provisions have been included in the national curriculum to enable pupils with disabilities to participate in team games on an equal basis with their able-bodied counterparts; what representations he has received on this issue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The current national curriculum for physical education, which includes games, was drafted so that specific interpretation or modification is required for as few pupils with special educational needs as possible. The aim was to ensure that all children should have the opportunity to take part in national curriculum physical education.

When reviewing the national curriculum, the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority appointed a special needs advisory group specifically to ensure that the requirements of pupils with special educational needs were taken fully into account. The revised proposals for physical education, published for consultation earlier this month, include elements of the programmes of study which can be taught to all pupils in ways appropriate to their abilities. Where necessary, pupils with special educational needs will be able to gain experience of team games through activities such as wheelchair basketball, rounders and table tennis.

Educational Psychology Services

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what considerations underlay his decision to revise guidelines for staffing levels in special schools and not for educational psychology services;

(2) what plans he has to introduce guidelines for the staffing levels for educational psychology services following the increase in their statutory role and functions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has not revised the guidance on staffing levels for pupils with special educational needs. This remains as set out in circular 11/90, "Staffing for Pupils with Special Educational Needs". There are no plans to revise it or to introduce guidelines for the staffing levels of educational psychology services. It is for each local education authority to determine such staffing levels based on local needs and priorities.

Students' Meals

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what element of funding for the Further Education Funding Council is designed to cover the cost of students' meals.

Mr. Boswell: Further education funding is not separately earmarked for students' meals. Colleges have discretion if they wish to use part of their FEFC recurrent funding to support catering services for students.

Teachers

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the figures for January 1994 for teacher numbers and vacancies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department's annual survey of teacher numbers and vacancies in maintained schools including grant-maintained schools shows that full-time equivalent teacher numbers in England rose by nearly 1,900 between January 1993 and January 1994. The vacancy rate of 0·4 per cent. equals last year's lowest-ever recorded rate. The numbers involved equate to one vacancy for every 16 schools, a four-fold improvement on the position in 1990.

Provisional teacher numbers in LEA-maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools and self-governing state schools rose by 0·5 per cent. from 389,100 full-time equivalent teachers in January 1993 to nearly 391,000. The estimated overall pupil to teacher ratio was 18·04:1.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

African Development Bank

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what shareholding he has in the African development bank; how Britain's influence is exercised in the policymaking of the bank; and what are the size of other countries' financial contributions to the bank.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As at 31 December 1993 Britain had a 1·478 per cent. shareholding in the African development bank. Our pledge to the sixth replenishment of the African development fund, which covered commitments for the period 1991-93, was 4 per cent. of the total.

We exercise influence over bank policies through our director in the bank, shared with Germany, Holland and Portugal; through bilateral contacts; and in negotiations to replenish the resources of the bank group.

Details of shareholdings of other members of the bank and of contributions to the fund are contained in the bank's annual report, copies of which are available in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what attitude he has taken to the replenishment of the African development bank's funding.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have taken an active part in negotiations for the seventh replenishment of the African development fund, which lends on concessional terms to the poorest countries in the region. Progress was made in Nairobi, in the margins of the annual meeting of the African development bank, but a number of issues remain to be agreed relating to the way the bank's resources as a whole should be allocated. We hope the negotiations can be concluded soon.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the Knox report on the operations of the African development bank.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We consider the report of the task force on project Quality headed by Mr. David Knox, a former vice-president of the World bank, to be a sound analysis of the operational and organisational weaknesses of the African development bank.

We have urged management to prepare an action plan and to implement the recommendations in the report as a matter of urgency.

TRANSPORT

A64

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he has received in relation to the viability of the A64 upgrading.

Mr. Key: The recent review of the national roads programme assessed all schemes against economic, strategy and environmental criteria. Because of their lower priority compared with other schemes nationally, the A64 York to Malton and Malton to Seamer schemes have been categorised "longer term". They will be placed temporarily in abeyance until schemes with a higher priority have been delivered.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the air traffic control separation monitoring function at (a) Leeds-Bradford and (b) Humberside air traffic control centres can respond to aircraft final approach separation applied by controllers at the Leeds-Bradford and Humberside approach radar facility; what plans there are to re-programme the separation monitoring function; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The air traffic control separation monitoring function is a facility developed and operated by the national air traffic services for use at locations where they provide the air traffic services. It is used to detect and investigate any occurrence which involves loss of aircraft separation. As Leeds-Bradford and Humberside air traffic services are provided by the airports, the NATS SMF is not available at those locations. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact Leeds-Bradford and Humberside airports direct about their arrangements for monitoring aircraft separations.

Night Flying, Coventry

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will place restrictions on night flying at Coventry airport;

(2) if he will investigate night flying operations at Coventry airport.

Mr. Norris: No. Coventry airport is not designated under section 80 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982 in respect of noise control, nor have we received any requests for the airport to be so designated. Currently, only Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports are so designated.

Private Detection Agencies

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the names of the private detective agencies employed by his Department since April 1991.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

A40/M50 Road Scheme

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the cost to date of preparation of plans for the A40/M50 road scheme from Longford to Gorsley, now abandoned, since the proposals were first introduced in 1989.

Mr. Key: The question is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. The chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, has written to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Chris Smith, dated 16 May 1994:

You have asked the Secretary of State for Transport, for the cost to date of preparation of plans for the A40/M50 road scheme from Longford to Gorsley, now withdrawn, since the proposals were first introduced in 1989. I have been asked to reply.

The total cost has been approximately £5½ million which includes consultants fees, detailed surveying and hydraulic modelling and VAT.

Cenargo

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made with the European Commission with regard to the case of the ferry company Cenargo following the most recent meeting of the Maritime Council working group.

Mr. Norris: I understand that the Commission has decided to open infraction proceedings against Spain under article 169 of the treaty of Rome in this case.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 25 April, Official Report, column 42, if he will make it his policy to employ only those private detective agencies which are members of the Association of British Investigators.

Mr. Key: It is the Secretary of State's policy to financially approve and technically assess all suppliers and contractors employed by the Department. The membership of professional associations would be a factor for consideration in such evaluation, but non-membership would not rule them out.

Transport Research Laboratory

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he received from the trade unions regarding the future structure of the Transport Research Laboratory; when he met them prior to his announcement on 30 March regarding privatisation of the Transport Research Laboratory; and what consideration he has given to the proposals received.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend and I met the trade unions on 22 March having previously received representations from them about the plans for privatisation of the Transport Research Laboratory. The representations included a proposal that the Laboratory should remain in the public sector, but with its non-Government work separately accounted for in a commercial subsidiary. We gave careful consideration to the proposal before concluding that it was not practicable or in the best interests of the laboratory's future.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the representations his Department has received on the subject of privatising the Transport Research Laboratory (a) in the three years before the announcement in May 1992 of his wish to privatise the Transport Research Laboratory and (b) since that date; and if he will give the number in categories (a) and (b) which (i) oppose privatisation of the Transport Research Laboratory, (ii) express worries about privatisation and (iii) support privatisation.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend and I have, since the announcement in May 1993 that the Transport Research Laboratory could, in principle, be privatised, received 28 representations on this subject from organisations and individuals representing the motor transport industry, academic institutions, staff and other groups. We have also received correspondence from 50 right hon. and hon. Members. No representations were received on this subject prior to the announcement in May 1993.

The representations received do not lend themselves to the categorisation requested by the hon. Member. A variety of views were expressed for and against privatisation. The majority of representations came from those who have concerns about aspects of the proposed sale of the laboratory.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what written communication from his Department was sent to the departmental trade union side during the three months prior to the setting up of the Transport Research Laboratory Agency regarding the drafting of the framework document; what reference was made to decisions by Ministers regarding the privatisation of the laboratory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: My Department wrote to the trade unions about various aspects of the Transport Research Laboratory framework document, including consultation arrangements with the trade unions, equal opportunites, health and safety and procurement. The Department also reported on my right hon. Friend's consideration of the option of privatisation and the conclusion then reached that the laboratory should be retained as an agency subject to the future re-examination of all options.

Consultants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the expenditure on management and financial consultants by his Department in 1992-93.

Mr. Norris: The amount spent by the Department of Transport and its agencies in 1992-93 on management and financial consultants was £19·65 million.

North Wales Coast Line

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to ensure that undertakings made by him and his fellow Ministers, at the time of the passage of legislation to privatise British Rail, will be fulfilled with regard to maintaining the quality of services along the north Wales coast.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State issued objectives, instructions and guidance to the Director of Passenger Rail Franchising on 22 March. Delivery of those objectives should secure an overall improvement in the quality of railway passenger services on the north Wales coast, and elsewhere in the United Kingdom.

Channel Tunnel

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure the security of the channel tunnel and its users; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Secretary of State for Transport has, under the terms of the Channel Tunnel (Security) Order 1994, directed the concessionaires—Eurotunnel—and other channel tunnel users to take appropriate security measures to protect the tunnel system, the trains and associated facilities, people and property against acts of violence.

The Secretary of State has also authorised officials from the Department of Transport's transport security division to inspect the security arrangements in place to ensure that the required security standards are, and continue to be, met.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what authorisations for commercial operations have been given to Eurotunnel.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom/French Channel Tunnel Intergovernmental Commission has, on the advice of the United Kingdom/French Channel Tunnel Safety Authority and the maitre d'oeuvre for the project, authorised Eurotunnel to bring the channel tunnel into operation for through freight trains and heavy goods vehicle shuttles. I am placing copies of Eurotunnel's application and the authorisation in the Library.

Traffic Signs

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will consider relaxing his Department's policy that traffic signs should not normally be provided to direct vehicles to named commercial premises.

Mr. Key: I am seeking views from the local authority associations and other interested organisations on proposals that highway authorities should have greater flexibility to provide signs appropriate to local needs. Any relaxation of the existing policy would be accompanied by Department of Transport guidance on the management of signing to ensure safety, clarity and continuity of signing and to prevent sign clutter.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Inheritance Tax

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average age of purchaser-operators of working farms in the year preceding and each year since the passing of the Finance Act 1992 giving qualification to inheritance tax relief at 100 per cent. on agricultural land.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that this information is not available.

Forestry

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what day the Government will publish their preferred options on the future of forestry in England; what form the subsequent consultations will take and over what time scale; and which organisations will be invited to take part in the consultation process.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland plans to make an announcement during the summer about our conclusions from the forestry review, and to publish a document which will form the basis of consultation on our preferred options. The form and timing of the consultation will depend on the conclusions that Ministers reach.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the number of day visits made to the Thetford forest park last year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In the year to 31 March 1994, an estimated 1·5 million people made day visits to Thetford forest park.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what account the Government will take, in selecting their preferred options for the future of forestry in England, of the submissions received by the forestry review group from commentators opposing privatisation.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The representations made to the forestry review group are being taken into account as we consider options following the review.

Cereal Production

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is her most recent estimate of the yield factor per hectare for cereal production.

Mr. Jack: My Department's most recent estimate of the average yields per hectare for the 1993 United Kingdom cereals harvest is as follows:

Tonnes per hectare (standardised to 14·5 per cent. moisture content

	Tonnes
Wheat	7·25
Barley	5·16
Oats	5·19
Other cereals	4·70

Overgrazing

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response she has received to paragraph 3.57 of the Government's paper Cm. 2428, "Biodiversity: The UK Action Plan" concerning overgrazing; and if she will now consider introducing new measures to reduce the effect on moorland and upland habitats of over grazing of sheep.

Mr. Jack: We have not received any response to paragraph 3.57 as such. However, we have already introduced upland environmentally sensitive areas and environmental restrictions under the hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme, both of which contribute in different ways to discouraging the overgrazing of moorland and upland habitats. We have also carried out consultations on proposals to introduce a moorland scheme and to attach environmental protection conditions to payments unde the sheep annual premium scheme.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Human Rights

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what rights of citizens are specified in the treaties of the European Communities and the European Union; and what measures have been adopted to give effect to these rights.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The treaty of Rome, as amended by the treaty on European Union, confers a number of rights on citizens of the European Union. These, and the measures adopted to give them effect, include:

—the right to move and reside freely within the territory of the member states, subject to the limitations and conditions laid down in the Treaty (essentially governed by Articles 48, 52 and 59 of the Treaty of Rome and a number of Regulations and Directives, including Council Regulation 1612-68 and Council Directives 90/364 EEC, 90/365 EEC and 93/96 EEC);

—the right to vote and to stand as a candidate in elections to the European Parliament in the Member State in which the citizen resides (measures were adopted in Council Directive 93/109 EC. These were implemented in the United Kingdom by the European Parliamentary Elections (changes to the Franchise and Qualifications and Representatives) Regulations 1994);

—the right to vote and to stand as a candidate in municipal elections in the Member State in which the citizen resides (implementation of these rights is still under discussion);

—the right to protection by the diplomatic and consular authorities and another Member State in foreign countries where the Member State of which the citizen is a national is not represented (subject to the Guidelines for the Protection of Unrepresented EC Nationals by EC Missions in Third Countries, which took effect on 1 July 1993);

—the right to petition the European Parliament (as set out in Article 138d of the Treaty. This right has long been accepted by the Parliament and was reflected in the Parliament's rules of procedure long before the entry into force of the Treaty on European Union);

—the right to apply to the European Ombudsman to investigate allegations of maladministration by the Community institutions (as set out in Article 138e of the Treaty and the Decision adopted by the European Parliament in September 1993 on the regulations and general conditions governing the performance of the Ombudsman's duties, subsequently approved by the Council in its decision on February 1994).

Azerbaijan and Armenia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to use the United Kingdom's membership of the conference on security and co-operation in Europe to encourage the Minsk group to assume the leading role in seeking a resolution of the conflict which respects the territorial integrity of Azerbaijan and Armenia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We continue to support the CSCE's plans to convene a conference in Minsk to achieve a political settlement of the dispute. We keep in close contact with the Swedish chairman of the Minsk group and have offered a Russian-speaking British diplomat to assist his team.

Council of Ministers (Documents)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in regard to the decision of the European Parliament on 26 April in respect of the release by the Council of Ministers of documents discussed at meetings of the Council.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have noted the recommendation by the Legal Affairs Committee of the European Parliament that the Parliament should support the Dutch Government's legal challenge of the treaty base under which the code of conduct on access to information was adopted. We consider that the code was adopted under the correct treaty base, and fully support its objective of greater openness and transparency.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to raise the issue of Rwanda in the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We supported the proposal for a special session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights to discuss Rwanda. The session will take place on 24 and 25 May.

United Nations (Military Equipment)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent proposals he has considered relating to improving the cost-effectiveness of the United Nations military procurement system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Current measures being pursued by the United Nations to improve the cost-effectiveness of United Nations procurement procedures include the development of appropriate standards and specifications for incorporation into contracts, and establishing standby contracts for the supply of common user items, material and services. An improved system for handling air transport contracts is also being introduced. These measures are based on the need to achieve a timely response while ensuring cost-effectiveness and compliance with United Nations financial regulations.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the quantity and quality of military equipment that has been stockpiled by the United Nations at its depot in Pisa, Italy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations maintains a depot at Pisa, which comprises serviceable items from completed missions. As part of its efforts to improve its ability to mount new peacekeeping missions the United Nations is planning to use the depot as a logistics base where "start-up kits" will be held and maintained at readiness for deployment. The current plans call for up to five such kits which might be deployed either singly or in combination.

United Nations

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent consideration his Department has given to policy relating to the financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations; what discussions he has had with his United Nations counterparts on this issue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The costs of United Nations peackeeping operations are shared among member states according to the United Nations peacekeeping scale of assessments. The United Kingdom pays 6·373 per cent. of costs on the scale. The United Nations peacekeeping scale of assessment is in need of reform, as the 1992 report by the high level expert group—Volcker/Ogata—made clear. Some limited changes were agreed at last year's general assembly. We are now working with other like-minded states to try and identify a more general solution to the problems of the scale.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to the United Nations study on a proposed International Satellite Monitoring Agency contained in United Nations document A/AC. 206.14.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations study on a proposed international satellite monitoring agency was considered by the 38th general assembly in 1983. The proposal was not adopted.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent consideration he has given to article 24 of the United Nations charter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The changed situation of the world following the ending of the cold war has enabled the Security Council to carry out its duties more effectively than before. The council has already made arrangements to make its annual report to the general assembly more timely and readable.

Privatisation (Consultants)

Mr. Millburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will estimate the cost of employing consultants in connection with privatisation programmes in which his Department has been engaged since 1980.

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 4 May 1994]: Estimated expenditure on studies carried out since 1987 for the Overseas Development Administration on the future status of the Crown agents for overseas Governments and administrations, and future ownership options for the Natural Resources Institute, is £208,000, net of VAT. Figures for any expenditure in earlier years are not available. The British aid programme has also paid for consultancy studies related to the privatisation programmes being pursued by overseas governments. An estimate of expenditure on these could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Octav Botnar

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further efforts his Department will make to secure the return to the United Kingdom of Octav Botnar.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

The offences for which Mr. Botnar is wanted in the United Kingdom are offences against tax legislation. Because of that, they are not extraditable from Switzerland, where Mr. Botnar now is. Switzerland is one of several countries which will not extradite for such "fiscal" offences. Mr. Botnar has on several occasions indicated that he will return to this country voluntarily and I hope that he will do so.

HEALTH

Mental Health

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are her plans for major awards for health districts which are remodelling their mental health services; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The Department, in conjunction with the mental health task force, is contributing £319,000 over three years to an initiative organised and administered by the Sainsbury centre for mental health. The centre will award grants of between £100,000 and £250,000 to between five and eight district health authorities to help them develop their mental health services. Initial awards will be announced this autumn. The selected projects will be evaluated and the results widely disseminated.

Drugs

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the savings to the NHS budget if NHS doctors were under an obligation to prescribe, and pharmacists to dispense, the cheaper available forms of the compound they considered most clinically appropriate for their patients.

Dr. Mawhinney: No such estimate has been made by the Department. General practitioners are encouraged to prescribe cost-effectively and to be discriminating about the use of more expensive preparations where there is no significant clinical benefit.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many youngsters aged under 18 years have attended hospitals in the north Yorkshire area for treatment for drug abuse over the last five years.

Mr. Bowis: Monitoring substance misuse by young people in the North Yorkshire area is a matter for the North Yorkshire district health authority, to which I refer my hon. Friend.

General Practitioners

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about the progress of the negotiations with the medical profession on general practitioners' out-of-hours services.

Dr. Mawhinney: I am announcing today—after nine months of negotiation—agreement between the British Medical Association and the Government on changes to general practitioners' terms of service.

The patients charter confirmed the 24-hour nature of the GP service and both the BMA and I confirmed that again today. Patients will continue to receive emergency treatment when and where they need it—including a home visit if necessary—at any hour of the day or night.

What we have agreed is a sensible clarification and modernisation of the GPs' terms of service which:

- make clear that all patients will continue to be able to speak directly to a doctor out of hours and that they will still receive promptly the emergency care they need;
- make it possible for GPs and practices to work on a more co-operative basis, spending less time on call, but working more intensively when they are on call;
- clarify the GP's responsibility for deciding whether an individual needs to be seen immediately at home and, if not, when and where treatment can most appropriately be given;
- support the development of an additional new way for family doctors to provide out of hours emergency care—the primary care centre.

A press release, including comments from Dr. Ian Bogle, chairman of the General Medical Services Committee of the BMA, will be issued and copies placed in the Library and the Vote Office.

Harlow Wood Hospital

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many letters she has received concerning the proposed closure of Harlow Wood hospital, Nottinghamshire; what proportion of these letters were for and against closure; if she will place copies of the correspondence in the Library; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Changes in the provision of orthopaedic services and the proposed closure of Harlow Wood orthopaedic hospital were the subject of public consultation between 1 December 1993 and 2 March 1994. Letters about this consultation were for the district health authority to take into account when considering the way ahead. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Alan Tolhurst, chairman of North Nottinghamshire health authority, for details.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cost of the employment of chairmen and directors of NHS trusts in 1993-94.

Dr. Mawhinney: Audited accounts containing this information for 1993-94 will not be available until the end of 1994. The codes of conduct and accountability which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State issued on 28 April require national health service boards to establish remuneration and terms of service committees and to publish details of board members' remuneration in an annual report.

Foetuses (Research)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has had from the Research Defence Society about research involving the human foetus.

Mr. Sackville: None. Research involving the use of foetuses and foetal material is covered by the code of practice drawn up by the Polkinghorne committee and published in 1989 in its report entitled "Review of the Guidance on the Research Use of Fetuses and Fetal Material". Copies are available in the Library.

Social Workers

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many social workers in the employment of the health service have been (a) assaulted and (b) murdered in the course, or in consequence, of their work in each year since 1990.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) on 27 January at column 373.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many work-related (a) assaults and (b) murders of social workers occurred in each year since 1990.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Children's Hospital Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 11 May, Official Report, column 160, how much time has been set aside for the validation, aggregation and analysis of the survey results; and if she will estimate a date for the publication of those results.

Dr. Mawhinney: Analysis of the returns is under way. An announcement will be made when it is complete.

Heart Bypass Surgery

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what evidence her Department has concerning the number of people dying while waiting for heart bypass surgery;

(2) how many people died while waiting for heart bypass surgery in each region in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information is collected on removals from waiting lists but does not differentiate between the various reasons, which include death. Patients may die from a wide range of causes, in common with the rest of the population, while waiting for treatment. Emergencies are always treated immediately and patients who need urgent treatment are given priority.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the average length of time a person waits for a heart bypass operation in each region;

(2) how many patients, according to latest figures, have waited for heart bypass surgery for more than 12 months, in each region.

Dr. Mawhinney: Such information as is available is given in "Hospital Episode Statistics, Volume 2". The latest year for which information has so far been published is 1990-91. Copies are available in the Library.

NHS (Private Capital)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many schemes using private sector capital in the NHS were refused approval by her Department and the Treasury (a) before April 1993 and (b) since April 1993.

Mr. Sackville: Since April 1993 two schemes using private sector capital in the national health service have been formally refused approval. These were:

a proposal from North Tyne Health Alliance (Newcastle and North Tyneside Health Authorities and Newcastle and North Tyneside Family Health Services Authorities) to lease office accommodation.

a proposal from South Western Regional Health Authority to provide residential accommodation at Glenside for students attending Avon and Gloucestershire College of Health.

The Department issued guidance on "Use of private sector capital in the NHS" (EL(89)MB142) in 1989. Between then and April 1993 no schemes that were formally submitted were refused approval. Information is not available on schemes abandoned at a draft stage as a result of advice received from the Department in response to informal inquiries. Copies of the guidance will be placed in the Library.

HIV/AIDS

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken by her Department to ensure that a strategic approach is secured across Government Departments on issues related to HIV and AIDS; and what plans she has to introduce a formal national strategy in respect of HIV and AIDS.

Mr. Sackville: "The Health of the Nation" White Paper sets out the strategic direction for HIV/AIDS and sexual health to be followed by all relevant Departments. This is supported by a Government strategy paper issued in 1993 which reiterated the continuing commitment to HIV/AIDS in the light of recent research into prevalance of HIV infection in this country.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been undertaken by her Department of the efficacy of needle exchange schemes in reducing levels of transmission of the HIV virus among intravenous drug users; and what plans she has to introduce such a scheme on a nationwide basis.

Mr. Bowis: Monitoring and evaluation of needle and syringe exchange schemes since 1987 has shown that they contribute towards the adoption of safer injecting behaviour among those who continue to inject drugs. It is too soon to judge their success in reducing the levels of transmission of HIV among intravenous drug users.

Specific funding has been given to health authorities towards the costs of expanding the range of drug misuse services available, including the development of needle exchange schemes. This funding totals £25·238 million in 1994-95 of which £2·778 million is available for the expansion of needle exchange schemes within pharmacies.

It is the responsibility of health and local authorities to assess the needs of drug misusers for services, including needle exchange schemes, and to contract for services to meet those needs.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of ambulance staff in England employed by the NHS in 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993, using whole-time equivalents.

Mr. Sackville: The information available is shown in the table.

Ambulance staff in national health service employing authorities and trusts

	Number
1990	18,130
1991	17,630
1992	17,840

Figures fell between 1990 and 1991 due largely to a number of ambulance officers taking up separate senior manager terms and a fall in the demand for Patient Transport Services in the London Ambulance Service.

2. All figures include ambulance men and women, ambulance officers and control assistants.
3. The figure shown for 1992 is a corrected one from previously published figures.
4. Figures for 1993 are not yet available.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of control assistants, using whole-time equivalents, for each ambulance service in each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: The information available is shown in the table. Separate figures for control assistants are not centrally available.

Control Assistants and Ambulance Officers at 30 September (Whole time equivalents by region)

England total	2,780	2,340	2,420

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of ambulances in each service in England responded within (a) eight minutes and (b) 14 to 20 minutes to emergency calls in 1993-94.

Mr. Sackville: Information on ambulance service response times in 1993-94 will be published shortly.

NHS Reform

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which organisations have submitted proposals on the reform of the NHS whether written or orally in presentations to her or her ministerial colleagues in the last year.

Dr. Mawhinney: Ministers routinely have meetings on various subjects with many organisations. Detailed records are not kept of all the subjects discussed.

GPs (Deprivation Payments)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was (a) the total number of general practitioners and the whole-time equivalent and (b) the total number of, and amounts paid to, general practitioners receiving deprivation payments in each of the low, medium and high categories for 1993-94; and what are the comparable figures in each case for fundholding general practitioners.

Dr. Mawhinney: In April 1993, the total number of general practitioners in England was 26,116 amounting to a whole-time equivalent of 25,231.

Of the 26,116 GPs, the following numbers received deprivation payments:

Low level	10,392
Medium level	6,430
High level	4,611

Note: A GP may receive deprivation payments at more than one level.

The amounts of deprivation payments made to general practitioners in England, in 1992-93, the last year for which figures are available, were:

Low level	£14,846,862
Medium level	£9,764,321
High level	£8,496,343

Financial data on deprivation payments specifically made to fundholding general practitioners are not available.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Private Members' Bills

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) of 6 May, Official Report, column 651, what was the cost to his Department of the drafting of the amendments to the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 12 May, Official Report, column 213.

State Ceremonial Occasions

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Lord President of the Council which Government Departments or Offices other than the Department of National Heritage fund state ceremonial occasions.

Mr. Sproat: I have been asked to reply.

In addition to my own Department the following Government Departments meet some of the costs of state ceremonial occasions:

Foreign and Commonwealth Office
Ministry of Defence
Home Office
Department of Transport
Scottish Office
Welsh Office
HM Treasury

The Parliamentary Works Directorate meets the costs of certain ceremonial events in the Palace of Westminster.

SCOTLAND

Entertainment Venues

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to strengthening the arrangements for the licensing and supervision of entertainment venues, with particular reference to the elimination of drug dealing; what consideration he has given to introducing legislation on the licensing of stewards at such venues; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: District and islands councils have powers to license places of public entertainment under section 41 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982. The maximum penalty for holding an unlicensed public entertainment in circumstances where a licence under this provision is required was increased to £20,000 and/or six months' imprisonment by the Entertainments (Increased Penalties) Act 1990.

Authorities take account of the views of the police and local authority departments such as environmental services and building control on such applications and may attach a wide range of conditions designed to improve control at entertainment venues. Such conditions may include a requirement that stewards be employed.

Entertainment venues may also be licensed under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976 where a licensing board considers that premises are suitable for the sale of alcoholic liquor. Again the board may attach conditions to such a licence and may require the presence of door stewards.

Stewards may search persons who attend such functions with the person's consent. If consent is withheld, the person can be refused admission. In cases where suspect substances are found the person can be refused entry and police assistance summoned. There are no plans at present to introduce legislation on the licensing of stewards employed at entertainment venues. General guidelines on stewarding are contained in the "Guide to Health, Safety and Welfare at Pop Concerts and Similar Events" published by the Health and Safety Commission, the Home Office and the Scottish Office in October 1993.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of changes to the community charge register in Scotland in the latest available year; and what was the estimate of the level of under registration for the community charge.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not held centrally.

Junior Doctors

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of measures designed to reduce the hours worked by junior hospital doctors in each year since 1991-92.

Mr. Stewart: A total of £1·88 million was allocated to health boards for additional posts to help reduce juniors' hours in 1991-92, and £1·87 million was allocated to health boards and trusts in 1992-93 and £4·25 million in 1993-94, making a total of £8 million. In addition £1·2 million is available for allocation in 1994-95.

Training Schemes

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to ensure that funds made available to training providers in the course of the youth training and employment training schemes are used solely for training purposes.

Mr. Lang: The chief executives of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise are answerable for the way in which the public funds provided to their respective bodies are spent. I have asked the chairman of Scottish Enterprise and of Highlands and Islands Enterprise to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many training providers have ceased commercial activities in each local enterprise company; and how much public money had been given to those companies in the two years prior to them ceasing commercial activities.

Mr. Lang: The information is not held centrally. This is primarily an operational matter best taken up direct with the local enterprise companies.

Education Department (Promotional Material)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much expenditure has been incurred by the Scottish Office Education Department for the production and distribution of all promotional materials, including leaflets and video tapes, for each year since 1979 both in actual and real terms; and if he will set out in table form a list of each item of promotional material issued by the Scottish Education Office Department since June 1987 together with the total cost for each item.

Mr. Lang: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost to the Department.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about progress on construction of trunk road schemes during 1993-94, and those schemes the Government propose to start in Scotland in the next three financial years.

Mr. Lang: Excellent progress is being maintained in the development of a safe, high-quality trunk road network providing benefits to the whole of Scotland. The schemes I am announcing today continue our policy towards the upgrading of those key routes on our core network of major economic importance to Scotland's future. I am particularly pleased that we have been able to keep up the momentum of our plans to dual the A1. The emphasis of major projects is directed towards achieving progress on:

(1) the upgrading of the A74 to motorway;
(2) the completion of the Central Scotland motorway/near motorway network; and
(3) the upgrading of the A1.

Projects are currently being prepared to permit in the medium term:

(1) completion of the M77/A77 motorway and near motorway link between Glasgow and Ayrshire;
(2) completion of the M80 Glasgow—Stirling motorway;
(3) completion of the M8 Edinburgh—Glasgow motorway;
(4) completion of the M6 Carlisle—Glasgow motorway;
(5) completion of the A1 Edinburgh—Dunbar to near motorway standard and dualling schemes between Dunbar and the Border.

Feasibility and other studies are also being conducted on an M6-M8 fastlink and on complementary roads and transport provision around the firth of Forth.

This is an ambitious programme requiring substantial levels of investment. The Government see an increasing role for private sector finance and management skills and a number of projects are now at construction, being developed, or explored in line with the private finance initiative.

Significant progress has already been made. Seven major schemes, with a total value in excess of £100 million, were completed in 1993-94. The opening of the Brechin bypass in March this year completed the dualling of the strategically important A30 Edinburgh-Perth-Aberdeen route. The M8 St. James interchange, completed in August 1993, is the largest single "design and build" project to be built to date within the United Kingdom.

The schemes completed in 1993-94 were as follows:

	Cost £ million
A74(M) Nether Abington and Elvanfoot	41
M8 St. James Interchange	17
A9 Broomhill to Logie Easter	7

	Cost £ million
A90 Brechin Bypass	12
A90 Tarbrax to Forfar	13
A92 Bankhead Interchange	4
A96 Bucksburn Diversion	7

In the course of 1993-94, 17 schemes with a cost of more than £3 million were either under way or started. These schemes represent an investment in excess of £370 million. The projects include eight schemes valued at more than £240 million to upgrade the A74 to motorway. About two thirds of the A74 upgrading will be open to traffic by spring 1995. Construction of the M8 Newbridge-Edinburgh city bypass scheme has also started. This will provide important relief to the network west of Edinburgh once the scheme is completed in 1995. Progress continues on the construction of the privately financed Skye bridge, scheduled to open in 1995.

I am now able to announce those major schemes with an estimated cost of over £3 million each which are expected to start between April 1994 and March 1997, as follows:

Route
1994-95
A74(M)	Paddy's Rickle Bridge to Beattock (advance works)
A1	Tranent to Haddington
M77	Ayr road route
A74(M)	Ecclefechan to Eaglesfield phase II
1995-96 and 1996-97
A74(M)	Paddy's Rickle Bridge to Beattock (main works)
A74(M)	Beattock to Cleuchbrae
M8	Baillieston to Newhouse phase I
M77	Fenwick to B764 (Floak)
A68	Dalkeith advance works
A1	Haddington to Dunbar
A96	Kintore Bypass
A9	Logie Easter to Garrick Bridge
A830	Loch Nan Uamh to Polnish Bridge
A828	Creagan Bridge

These schemes have a total value of more than £300 million.

Our plans are, of course, subject to schemes satisfying the usual value for money criteria together with satisfactory completion of statutory procedures and the necessary preparatory work.

In addition to the major starts, funding for route action plans, road safety and other schemes is being maintained throughout the trunk road network. This will enable work improvements to be taken forward on the A76 Kilmarnock-Dumfries route and the A9 Perth-Thurso route and further good progress on the route action plans for the A1 between Edinburgh and Newcastle; the A96 between Aberdeen and Inverness; the A90 between Perth and Dundee; and the A7 from Hawick southwards.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Government Expenditure

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his oral answer to the right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) of 28 April, Official Report, column 372, by what means citizens of the United Kingdom benefit from educational and other activities in the Irish Republic; what are those other activities; what sums were expended by his Department on United Kingdom citizens being educated in the Republic for the current and each of the last two years; what is his estimate of the sums of public money expended by the Republic on those students; and what were the sums expended on the other activities referred to by (a) his Department and (b) the Irish Republic authorities.

Sir John Wheeler: United Kingdom citizens are free to choose to study in the Republic of Ireland or any other country of the European Community. In the current year 1,124 students from Northern Ireland are benefiting from higher education provision in the Republic of Ireland; the latest statistics available indicate that some 378 students from other parts of the United Kingdom attended full-time higher education courses there in 1991-92.

A number of children with hearing impairments, from Northern Ireland, are receiving special education at a special school in the Republic of Ireland.

Other educational activities include a range of collaborative ventures between the universities in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland which bring mutual benefits.

Some patients are referred to hospitals in the Republic of Ireland specifically for treatments which are not available in Northern Ireland.

The sums to be expended by the Northern Ireland Departments on Northern Ireland students and pupils educated in the Republic of Ireland are not yet available for the current financial year. However, the following figures are available for the last two years:

Year	£
1992-93	2,232,524
1993-94	3,486,347

Figures for the sums expended on students from other parts of the United Kingdom are not the responsibility of the Northern Ireland Departments.

Sums expended on the other educational activities are usually borne by the education institutions themselves but sometimes with the assistance of European funding. The Department of Health in Great Britain has responsibility for the financial aspects of referral of patients to hospitals in the Republic of Ireland.

The sums expended by the Government of the Republic of Ireland on educational and other activities is a matter for the Irish authorities.

University Students

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many students from (a) Germany and (b) the Republic of Ireland are currently enrolled at each university in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: Available information relates to full-time undergraduate students and is as follows:

	1993-94
Germany
Queen's University, Belfast	23
University of Ulster	113
Republic of Ireland
Queen's University, Belfast	519
University of Ulster	1,556

Mount Oriel Clinic, Belfast

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when planning permission was issued to the south and east Belfast unit of management of the Eastern area health board to develop a car park at Mount Oriel clinic, Saintfields road; if work commenced on site prior to planning permission being issued; if the planning application was supported by (a) Castlereagh borough council and (b) the roads service of the Department of the Environment; upon how many persons neighbour notices were served; how many objections were received; and if he will make a statement about traffic conditions on the roadway leading to this car park.

Mr. Tim Smith: Planning permission was granted on 29 March 1994 in relation to a retrospective application for development which had already commenced. Castlereagh borough council and the Department of the Environment's roads service raised no objections to the application. Eighteen neighbour notification notices were served. Subsequently 54 letters of objection were received from a total of 28 residences in the locality. As the road leading from the Saintfield road to the car park is not adopted into the public road network, it would not be appropriate for the Department to comment about the traffic conditions on it.

PRIME MINISTER

European Union Anti-Discrimination Law

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the competence of the European Union in regard to the adoption of European law against discrimination whether on the basis of sex, race, age or disablement following the entry into force of the Maastricht treaty.

The Prime Minister: The entry into force of the treaty on European Union has not altered the European Community's competence to legislate in respect of the principles under article 119 of the treaty of Rome against discrimination on the basis of sex, or its lack of specific competence to legislate against discrimination on the basis of race, age or disablement.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 19 May.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 19 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Civil Servants (Disability)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister how many civil servants are employed in his Department; and how many of them are registered disabled.

The Prime Minister: There are 107 civil servants employed in No. 10 Downing street, none of whom is registered disabled. For recruitment purposes, my office is part of the Cabinet Office. There are 16 registered disabled civil servants employed in the Cabinet Office, out of a total of 1,386. The Cabinet Office is an equal opportunities employer.

Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he received about the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill between 6 and 12 May; what replies he has sent or will be sending; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of representations, to which replies are being sent.

My right hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People announced the Government's plans for combating discrimination against disabled people during the debate on Report stage of the Bill on 6 May, Official Report, column 996, and gave further details in his answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Tiverton (Mrs. Browning) on 10 May, Official Report, column 136.

My right hon. Friend is currently working on the detail of the consultation he announced on 6 May. The full proposals will be issued as soon as possible.

EMPLOYMENT

Green Amanita

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the reasons for, and the costs and outcome of, the civil emergency exercise Green Amanita conducted recently.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Exercise Green Amanita was conducted to test the lead Department concept detailed in the Home Office guidance booklet "Dealing with Disaster".

The costs of setting up, organising and carrying out the exercise totalled £35,728. This figure does not include the participants' travelling costs or the cost of their time while at the exercise.

I understand that the exercise has resulted in a better understanding of how the lead Department concept works in practice and will make a significant contribution to the rewriting of the relevant section of the "Dealing with Disaster" booklet.

Offshore Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to ensure that British workers compete on a level playing field for jobs in the offshore oil and gas industry.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Although both British and foreign workers have open access to jobs offshore, British workers succeed in securing over 90 per cent. of the jobs available.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what United Kingdom employee costs are not paid by offshore oil and gas companies if they employ foreign nationals.

Mr. Hague: I have been asked to reply.

For national insurance contribution purposes, employment of United Kingdom or foreign nationals in an area of the continental shelf outside United Kingdom territorial waters, which the United Kingdom has the right to explore and exploit, is treated as employment in Great Britain. In common with other employers who have a place of business in Great Britain, offshore oil and gas companies have to pay the employer's share of national insurance contributions in respect of United Kingdom and foreign employees, except in certain limited circumstances where the employer is liable to pay contributions to the Norwegian state insurance scheme instead. If the employer has no place of business in Great Britian, it is not liable to pay the employer's share of the contribution in respect of any employees, whether United Kingdom or foreign.

Catering Industry

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures for the number of people employed in (a) the hotel industry and (b) the catering industry.

Miss Widdecombe: In December 1993, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 285,000 employees in employment in the hotel industry and other tourist or short-stay accommodation industry—standard industrial classification 665 and 667—and 882,000 in the catering industry—standard industrial classification 661-664—in Great Britain.

Privatisation (Consultants)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the cost of employing consultants in connection with privatisation programmes in which his Department has been engaged since 1980.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 4 May 1994]: Fees paid to date to legal and professional advisers necessary for the conduct of the privatisations total £2,450,261.

Hound Point Terminal

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with the Health and Safety Exexcutive over the investigation by the HSE into safety at the Hound Point terminal in the Linlithgow constituency.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 17 May 1994]: The Health and Safety Executive has kept me informed of the inspection arrangements at the new Hound Point marine 2 terminal. Particular concerns about the safety of the design and construction of the hydraulically operated, swivelling loading arms which are used to load crude oil into tankers and the possibility of spillage have been carefully considered. I gave the hon. Member details of this and HSE's continuing inspection plans in my response to his recent letter.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Terrorism

13. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve the legislation dealing with terrorism.

Mr. Howard: As my hon. Friend will be aware, Parliament recently renewed the Prevention of Terrorism Act. The Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill contains new police stop and search powers, creates two new offences and improves the legislation relating to the investigation of terrorism.

Crime Prevention

18. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives he has taken to maximise the use of new technology in crime prevention.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Recent initiatives by the Home Office in this area include a number of studies on CCTV as a crime control measure, and close co-operation with the vehicle manufacturers to promote the use of effective car immobiliser systems.

25. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to establish a coherent national crime prevention strategy.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government have developed a comprehensive crime prevention strategy. The Police and Magistrates Courts Bill and the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill will strengthen the powers of the courts to deal with offenders and lay the foundations for a new partnership between the police, the Government and the public to fight crime. We have also set up the National Board for Crime Prevention to disseminate best practice and we are expanding our successful safer cities programme.

Corporal Punishment

20. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the introduction of corporal punishment for crimes of violence.

Mr. Maclean: No. The reintroduction of corporal punishment would contravene the European convention on human rights.

Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill

21. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill.

Mr. Maclean: The Bill has been widely welcomed inside and outside Parliament. It responds to a range of concerns which I know are deeply felt.

Secure Training Centres

22. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in drawing up plans for the new secure training centres for persistent juvenile offenders.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe).

Sentencing

23. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last had a meeting with the Attorney-General to discuss the policy of appealing against lenient sentences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I meet my right hon. and learned Friend frequently. We discuss a wide range of matters of common interest. We share the same view of the importance of the power contained in section 35 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988.

Prison Statistics

24. Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were in prison at the most recent count.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On Wednesday 18 May 1994, there were 48,447 prisoners in Prison Service accommodation and 146 prisoners in police cells, giving a total of 48,593 prisoners in custody.

Obscene Publications Branch

26. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received from right hon. and hon. Members concerning the future of the obscene publications branch of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newcastle under Lyme (Mrs. Golding) on 16 May at column 341.

Drug Abuse

27. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further steps he proposes to combat the spread of drug and alcohol abuse by teenagers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My Department will continue to work closely with other Government Departments to ensure that the law and the wide range of policies for tackling the misuse of drugs and alcohol, particularly by young people, are effective.

HM Prison, Gartree

28. Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next intends to pay an official visit to HM Prison, Gartree.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At the present time my right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to make an official visit to Gartree prison.

Residence Arrangements

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to clarify the arrangements whereby persons of independent means are admitted to reside in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We are planning to lay consolidated immigration rules before the House, which will create a new category of investor, designed to attract investment into the country without weakening immigration control. The category of persons of independent means will continue, but with a minimum age of 60.

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what requirements the British Government have stipulated as conditions for their support for application to asylum policy of article K9 of the treaty on European Union.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Nothing has occurred to cause the Government to change their view that asylum policy issues are appropriately dealt with under title VI of the treaty on European Union.

Identity Cards

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Association of Chief Police Officers of the desirability and practicality of introducing either compulsory or voluntary identity cards.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In June 1993 the Association of Chief Police Officers sent us a copy of its report "National Identity Card Scheme" which favoured the introduction of a voluntary identity card scheme. My right hon. and learned Friend met Sir John Smith, president of ACPO, on 17 November 1993 to discuss the report.

Custodial Sentences

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made as to the effect on crime levels of reducing the use of custodial sentences.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given a question from my right hon. Friend the Member for Selby (Mr. Alison) on 3 March, columns 823-24.

Operation Elgar

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who authorised Operation Elgar on Wednesday 27 April.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Operation Elgar was authorised by the director of enforcement in the Immigration Service, with the knowledge of my right hon. and learned Friend and myself.

Immigration Detention Centres

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for the lastest date for which figures are available by Her Majesty's detention centre and by Her Majesty's prison the number of persons held in respect of alleged immigration irregularities; and if he will show the port where each of the individuals was originally apprehended.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 4 May 1994]: The following is the information available as at 11 May 1994.

DEFENCE

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 17 March, Official Report, column 850, whether the United Kingdom Polar Medal Assessment Committee deals with sensitive issues; on what date he first sought to establish whether the members of the committee would be content for their names to be published; from how many members of the committee he has heard; how many have not replied; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member on 18 May at columns 502-4.

Dockyard Projects

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current cost of dockyard projects; when the estimated cost last increased; and when he made the decision to award this work to Devonport royal dockyard.

Mr. Aitken: My Department spends around £420 million per annum on ship refitting and works projects, most of which is undertaken at the royal dockyards. Individual projects are rigorously controlled and monitored.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced last year that we shall, subject to satisfactory contractual negotiations, proceed with the Devonport nuclear refitting facility proposals. The project is proceeding satisfactorily to time and cost.

Land Mines

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will arrange a meeting with the mines advisory group to discuss the recent reports by the group and by Oxfam on the effects of land mines.

Mr. Aitken: I have no plans to arrange such a meeting but my Department welcomes initiatives aimed at increasing public awareness of this problem.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what safeguards exist to ensure that civil plutonium separated in THORP will not be diverted into a military programme.

Mr. Aitken: The measures which the Government apply to civil reprocessed plutonium to prevent its theft, sabotage or diversion are set out in the statement of Government policy on reprocessing and the operation of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield, which was made public on 4 August 1993. A copy of the statement is available in the Library of the House.

Recruitment

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the type of vetting his Department uses in respect of higher executive officers on the graduate recruitment scheme; and what account is taken of their party political and other high-profile activities prior to their employment in his Department.

Mr. Aitken: Higher executive officers on the graduate recruitment scheme are vetted to positive vetting (secret) level and will be subject to higher levels of vetting appropriate to the nature of work upon which they are employed. They are expected to perform their duties as civil servants with complete political impartiality, regardless of any previous political associations or activities.

"Front Line First"

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the number of man-hours involved in the formulation and implementation of his "Front Line First" exercise in the case of (a) officials, (b) military personnel and (c) management consultations; and what is the respective cost to the Exchequer of the hours expended.

Mr. Aitken: No estimate has been made of the total number of man hours so far expended on the defence costs study or of its future implementations.

Defence Sales

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when discussions began with the Government of South Africa about the possibility of agreeing a memorandum of understanding on defence sales; when he expects such a memorandum to be entered into; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: No such discussions have taken place.

Arms Testing Centre, Pendine

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that the NATO small arms testing and proofing facility will remain in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter for collective decision by the NATO authorities.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that the NATO small arms testing and proofing facility will continue to be based at the Pendine regional test centre.

Mr. Aitken: The proof and experimental establishment at Pendine is, in common with all such test and evaluation facilities, subject to a review by the director general of test and evaluation. Options arising from this are still being considered, but I hope that an announcement can be made in the not too distant future. This will be followed by a period of consultation with interested parties.

United Nations Operations

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what standard operating procedures are made available by United Nations staff to British military forces prior to their deployment on United Nations operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The United Nations secretariat issues guidelines to troop contributing states for each United Nations operation. These cover the administrative and logistic procedures for the operation in question.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the United Nations military staff committee.

Mr. Hanley: The United Nations military staff committee played a useful role in the Gulf crisis as a forum for the exchange of information. We do not envisage its reactivation in current circumstances.

Dr David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements currently exist to provide headquarters support for the deployment of British forces on United Nations operations.

Mr. Hanley: Depending on the scale and complexity of the British military contribution to a UN operation, appropriate support is provided either direct from the MOD headquarters or from a designated joint headquarters.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the establishment of a section within his Department to deal specifically with United Nations operations.

Mr. Hanley: MOD responsibility for the conduct of UN operations already lies with that part of the defence staff under the charge of the deputy chief of the defence staff (commitments).

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance his Department's press office gives to the British United Nations information centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My Department's press office provides no assistance to the British United Nations information centre.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the ability of British forces on United Nations duties to adjust to changing circumstances and demands in the course of an operation.

Mr. Hanley: British forces are highly adaptable and have a thorough professional grounding in military skills. Nevertheless, the Government monitor closely the changing circumstances of all UN operations to which British forces are committed to ensure that the British contingents' capabilities match the demands placed upon them.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what lessons he has learnt from the recent changes to the mission of United Nations forces in Sarajevo; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Following the Sarajevo ceasefire of February the role and responsibilities of UNPROFOR in the Sarajevo area have expanded to include tasks such as monitoring and control of heavy weapons, the manning of observation posts and checkpoints and patrolling confrontation lines. UNPROFOR has also had to take on similar tasks in relation to the Bosnian-Croat ceasefire in central Bosnia. Experience in carrying out these tasks has confirmed lessons already learned during UNPROFOR's deployment in Bosnia, including the importance of having sufficient troops and suitable equipment for the job.

Armed Forces (Operational Capability)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 May, Official Report, column 131, if he will make a statement on the senior levels of the chain of command that are involved in making central assessments of operational capability and to what extent those elements of the chain of command involved in making central assessments of operational capability include (a) civilians and (b) Ministers.

Mr. Hanley: Central assessments of operational capability in MOD are informed by reports rendered up the chain of command; including reports by senior officers who hold higher level and top level budgets—TLBs. Service TLB holders, including the front-line commanders in chief, sit on the predominantly military service executive committees whose own performance reports from the major contributions on operational capability, to the periodic central assessments reported to Ministers.

Service Musicians

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent considerations he has given to altering the role of service musicians as stretcher bearers during conflicts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: None. My Department has no plans to change the operational role of service musicians.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the current impact of service music and musicians on (a) operational capability, (b) service morale and (c) service recruitment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Service bands play an important part in service life and as such make an important contribution to morale and recruitment. Bands personnel also play an important operational role as medical orderlies and guards in times of conflict.

Sanctions

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role British forces have played in the implementation of United Nations resolutions relating to economic sanctions against (a) Iraq and (b) Libya.

Mr. Hanley: The Armilla patrol has been operating to implement the United Nations arms and trade embargo against Iraq in the Gulf, and on occasions has also participated in the multinational interception force in the northern Red sea to relieve ships from other nations.

British forces have played no active role in enforcing economic sanctions against Libya.

Service Chaplains

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the current impact of service chaplains on (a) operational capability and (b) service morale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My Department fully recognises the significant contribution made by service chaplains to the operational effectiveness and morale of the armed forces through the spiritual and pastoral care they provide for service personnel and their dependants.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

DNA Testing

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the accuracy of DNA tests; and if he will now introduce legislation to make blood tests compulsory in cases of disputed paternity.

Mr. John M. Taylor: DNA profiling evidence may be conclusive in eliminating a putative father from being the natural father of a child. It is also a technique which can provide extremely strong evidence of positive association and in most instances of dispute is the most accurate way to determine paternity. Courts already have the power to order such tests in appropriate cases. I have no plans to amend the law to make blood tests compulsory in cases of disputed paternity.

Legal Aid

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the representation he has received regarding the changes to the legal aid eligibility levels since they came into force.

Mr. John M. Taylor: From 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994 the Lord Chancellor and I received 368 representations from hon. Members about the financial conditions for legal aid. In the same period we received over 300 letter from members of the public. Those figures include representations about individual cases. We continue to have exchanges with the Law Society, the Bar Council and other bodies about matter relating to legal aid.

PRIME MINISTER

Citizens Charter (Disabled People)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the application of the citizens charter to the rights of disabled people.

The Prime Minister: The principles underlying the citizens charter apply to everyone, including people with disabilities. Public services should consider the needs of all their customers, including those with special needs, when drawing up charters and planning service provision.

Downing Street Declaration

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library questions concerning the Downing street declaration that he has received from Sinn Fein, together with the Government's answers.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland issued a commentary yesterday alongside questions from Sinn Fein which the Irish Government handed over last week. This commentary, including the Sinn Fein questions, has been placed in the Library.

TREASURY

Child Maintenance

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will amend as a matter of urgency the present Inland Revenue new rules issued in April 1988-89 which debar an unwed parent from maintenance tax relief though paying maintenance to a child or children in accordance with the Child Support Act 1991 and which also affects those ex-married payers who lose their maintenance relief if their ex-spouse remarries, in order to allow those taxpayers to receive tax relief in accordance with the old rules.

Mr. Dorrell: No. The new rules on tax relief for maintenance payments, which were introduced in the Finance Act 1988, ensure that married couples are not treated less generously than divorced, separated and unmarried people.

Mobile Telephones

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 6 May, Official Report, column 657, what was the cost of calls made on (a) car and (b) portable telephones in 1993-94; how much this equipment costs to buy or hire; and what were the maintenance costs.

Sir John Cope: The cost to the Treasury in 1993-94 of calls made on car telephones and mobile telephones excluding VAT was £2,332 and £1,585 respectively. The telephones themselves cost between £140 and £500 depending on type. Total annual maintenance for this equipment in 1993-94 was about £250.

Public Expenditure

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 12 May, Official Report, columns 232-34, what were the principle causes of the difference between the figure for local authority self-financed expenditure of £9,700 million in 1993-94 and the equivalent figure of £10,400 million published in table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The principal cause is revised estimates by local authorities of their capital receipts in 1993-94, as reported to the Department of the Environment in their capital payments returns for the third quarter of 1993-94, which became available in the spring of 1994.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 12 May, Official Report, columns 232-34, what were the principal causes of the difference between the figure for expenditure on the European Communities of £1,620 million in 1993-94 and the equivalent figure of £2,450 million published in table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95; and if he will make statement.

Mr. Portillo: The main cause is unexpected changes to the timing of contributions to the Community budget. The precise moment at which contributions are made to the Community and their quantum depend on many factors outside the Government's control, making this programme difficult to forecast with accuracy.

EMPLOYMENT

North Yorkshire TEC

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much of North Yorkshire training and enterprise council's budget for 1993-94 was devoted to the development of (a) self-employed businesses and (b) new businesses in the Harrogate/Knaresborough travel-to-work area.

Miss Widdecombe: North Yorkshire training and enterprise council's budget for 1993-94 was £21,193,516. Many elements of the budget include assistance for the development of self-employed and new businesses. In addition, £265,268 was devoted to services exclusively for existing businesses, many of them self-employed, and £1,710,800 exclusively for the development of new businesses.

It is not possible to give a complete indication of the proportion of spending on the development of businesses which was devoted to the Harrogate and Knaresborough area, as some of the services are demand led rather than allocated to areas. However, for two of the services for existing businesses, business skill seminars and the business development service, 433 out of a total of 2,191 people assisted during 1993-94 came from the Harrogate and Knaresborough area. For the development of new business, in 1993-94, North Yorkshire TEC allocated 20·1 per cent. of its business start-up budget to the Harrogate and Knaresborough area.

West Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what advice was given on requests to the West Wales TEC, in response to inquiries about the legality, propriety and regularity of expenditure under the voluntary early retirement scheme for secondees from the department who were proposing to continue in full-time employment with that TEC.

Miss Widdecombe: The training and enterprise council was told that the early retirement schemes were not meant for secondees who intended to continue full-time employment with their TEC.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security at what times he or his office, and the Minister for Disabled People or his office, were informed of the text of the reply from the Lord President of the Council to the question tabled by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) for answer on 6 May in regard to the number of amendments to the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill drafted by the Office of Parliamentary Counsel.

Mr. Lilley: Details of such exchanges between Departments are not normally divulged.

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what calculations Her Majesty's Government made of the expenditure implications of the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill when the money resolution for the Bill was tabled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The money resolution was not dependent upon quantification of the impact of the Bill. It was necessary to enable consideration in Committee of those provisions, identified in italics in the Bill as first printed, which give rise to public expenditure.

Uniform Claimant System

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what costs have been incurred in splitting the previous DHSS uniform claimant system into the current separate agency system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not available.

Public Expenditure

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the answer of 12 May, Official Report, columns 232-34, what were the principal causes of the difference between the figure for expenditure by the Department of Social Security of £67,800 million in 1993-94 and the equivalent figure of £67,300 million published in table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The difference is caused by a spring supplementary estimate of £274 million plus a late year reapportionment of expenditure from cyclical to new control total.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the answer of 12 May, Official Report, columns 232-34, if he will publish a table setting out the principal causes of the difference between the figure for cyclical social security expenditure of £14,400 million in 1993-94 compared with the equivalent figure of £14,000 million in table 5.2 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The difference is caused by a spring supplementary estimate of £568 million minus a late year reapportionment of expenditure from cyclical to new control total.

Social Fund

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what social fund budget the (a) East Nottinghamshire, (b) North Nottinghamshire and (c) West Nottinghamshire district offices held in 1993-94; and what budget they hold for 1994-95 on a comparable cost basis.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Paddy Tipping, dated 20 May 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Social Fund budget in the Benefits Agency's East, North and West Nottinghamshire Districts.

You asked for details of these Districts' budget for 1993-94 and 1994-95 on a comparable cost basis. Those details are shown at Appendix A.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Appendix A

	1993-94 actual allocation (£)	1993-94 allocation expressed in terms of 1994-95 prices[1] (£)	1994-95 actual allocation (£)

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Science Minister

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the benefits to the United Kingdom in the past two years from the presence of a Science Minister in the Cabinet.

Mr. Waldegrave: Since the last election, the Government have published a White Paper on Science, Engineering and Technology (Cm 2250), the first major policy review for over 20 years; restructured the research councils with mission statements focused on wealth creation, the quality of life and user needs; launched a technology foresight programme to help industrialists and scientists identify market and technological opportunities over the next 10 to 20 years; inaugurated a major campaign to promote the public understanding of science; published a forward look representing a first step towards developing a process of annual critical review of the balance and direction of SET, across the whole of the public sector; agreed with our European partners a fourth Community framework programme for science and technology, reflecting in many respects United Kingdom priorities and maintained the budget for the science base in real terms.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Counsel

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Lord President of the Council what instructions he proposes to issue to the Office of Parliamentary Counsel in relation to the priority to be given to the drafting of amendments for Departments to (a) Government legislation in Standing Committee, pursuant to undertakings given by Ministers in Second Reading debates and (b) for use by Back Benchers in debate on Private Members' Bills; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: It is a matter for the First Parliamentary Counsel to arrange the work load of his office to meet priorities set out by Ministers in their instructions. I therefore have no plans to issue instructions.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Health and Social Services

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total spent on (a) clerical staff and (b) administrative staff by area health and social services boards in each year since 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) on 16 December 1993, Official Report, column 867-68. Figures are available only for the combined administrative and clerical group of staff.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total spent on management salaries by each health and social services boards in each year since 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) on 16 December 1993, Official Report, column 867-68.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much was spent in total on nursing and midwifery staff (a) including and (b) excluding agency staff, by area health and social services boards in each year since 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev.r j 1-10 Martin Smyth) on 16 December 1993, Official Report, column 867-68. There are no agency nurses employed in the health and personal social services in Northern Ireland.

Cereals

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are their most recent figures for yield factor per hectare for (a) wheat production in Northern Ireland and (b) barley production in Northern Ireland; how many hectares were used for the growing of (i) wheat and (ii) barley; and when representations were last made to the European Commission to have Northern Ireland included with England and Wales as the yield region for cereal aid purposes.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer sent 19 May 1994]: The average yield in Northern Ireland in 1993 of wheat was 5·85 tonnes per hectare and of barley was 3·75 tonnes per hectare. The June 1993 agricultural census in Northern Ireland recorded 6,701 hectares of wheat and 38,554 hectares of barley.

Representations have never been made to the European Commission to have Northern Ireland included with England and Wales as a yield region for cereal aid purposes —that is an internal matter for the United Kingdom. Nevertheless, all efforts have been made by Government to convince the European Commission of the needs of Northern Ireland's specialist growers.

EDUCATION

Higher Education

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether students who are being trained in school-centred consortia, in the absence of a direct involvement by an institute of higher education, came within the scope of the provisions of the charter for higher education.

Mr. Boswell: The charter for higher education explains the standards of service that higher education users can expect of publicly funded universities and colleges. It does not relate directly to the standards of service provided by other institutions involved in the delivery of education or training of a similar level or kind.

Upper Limb Disorders

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the present number of civil servants taking legal action against his Department as a result of work-related upper limb disorders.

Mr. Boswell: None.

Colleges, Lancashire

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish the total funding given in 1994-95 to each college and sixth-form tertiary college in Lancashire.

Mr. Boswell: The Further Education Funding Council has not yet announced its allocations to individual colleges for the academic year 1994-95.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many surplus school places there are currently in the local education authority of (a) Doncaster, (b) Barnsley, (c) Rotherham and (d) Sheffield; and what were the figures (i) five years and (ii) 10 years ago.

Mr. Forth: The latest figures available on a comprehensive basis were collected by the Department through a detailed survey of all local education authorities in 1991. For the figures derived from that survey, I refer the hon. Member to the reply to the hon. Member for Warwickshire, North (Mr. O'Brien) on 31 January 1994, Official Report, columns 517-21. Detailed information by local education authority is not available for earlier years since no common basis for assessing school capacity existed until the introduction of the more open enrolment provisions of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the schools involved in his schools-based initial teacher training pilot programme indicating for each school the number of children receiving prescribed extra support to overcome learning difficulties which are not the subject of statements, the number of children who have been assessed for statements in the last year and the number of children who have statements of special educational need.

Mr. Robin Squire: I will write to the hon. Member, enclosing a list of those schools involved in the first round of the school-centred initial teacher training scheme and showing the number of pupils with a statement of special education needs as shown in the 1993 school performance tables. The other information requested is not collected centrally.

Portable Telephones

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 6 May, Official Report, column 648, what was the cost of calls made on portable telephones in 1993-94.

Mr. Forth: In 1993-94, the cost of calls from the Department's mobile telephones was £8,244.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Health Promotion Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Attorney-General on what date the Wales area office of the Crown Prosecution Service received the papers from the South Wales police fraud squad and the district audit service in relation to the claiming of travel expenses by the previous chief executive of the Health Promotion Authority for Wales.

The Solicitor-General: On 10 May 1994, the Crown Prosecution Service Cardiff branch received the papers from the South Wales police following their investigation of the activities of the previous chief executive of the Health Promotion Authority for Wales. The police submitted the papers for advice as to whether criminal proceedings should be instituted.

There has been a meeting between the police and CPS lawyers and the CPS has asked for a number of additional inquiries to be made. Only when the results are available will it be possible for the CPS to advise.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Deportation Unit

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the future of the Metropolitan police's deportation unit.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Metropolitan Police headquarters functions and specialist units, including the deportation group, fall within the scope of the commissioner's current review. The object of the review is to make the best possible use of resources and to place functions where they are most appropriate.

Electronic Bulletin Boards

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what research his Department is currently engaged in concerning the use of public electronic bulletin board systems by criminals;

(2) which police forces currently deploy and train officers specifically in monitoring the electronic communication of information through bulletin boards and equivalent technology;

(3) what assessment he has made of the use being made by criminals of (a) the international and (b) other electronic bulletin board systems;

(4) how he proposes that the electronic telecommunication of illegal pornographic material through public electronic bulletin board systems will be monitored.

Mr. Maclean: The Home Office has not commissioned any research into the unlawful use of electronic bulletin boards, but the police have estimated that there are about 1,200 such boards in this country, the great majority of which are used entirely innocently. However, we are aware of certain cases where the police believe that bulletin boards are being used to disseminate obscene material or child pornography in breach of the Obscene Publications Act 1959 and the Protection of Children Act 1978 respectively.

What action the police take to monitor such bulletin boards, and whether any forces train and deploy officers specifically for this task, is an operational matter for chief officer to determine. The Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill will make it clear that the electronic transmission of data constitutes publication for the purposes of the Obscene Publications Act 1959 and will make obscenity and child pornography offences serious arrestable offences within the meaning of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, thereby giving the police a range of increased powers, including powers of search and seizure as well as powers of arrest. These will apply to those who disseminate obscene material via bulletin boards as they apply to pornographers in other media. We also propose to table an amendment to the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill in another place to ensure that the police and other law enforcement officers cannot be excluded from publicly accessible bulletin board systems by notices purporting to bar their entry.

Computer transmissions to this country from abroad are not subject to our criminal law, but the Government will consider whether it is possible to make such transmissions subject to controls equivalent to those on the importation of obscene or indecent articles.

Mobile Telephones

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letters from Mr. Ian Mann of the Chiswick crime prevention panel, dated 18 October 1993 and 27 April 1994, concerning the Chiswick initiative for mobile phone security.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Following receipt of Mr. Mann's letter of 18 October, which asked for a response within 24 hours, officials telephoned him to discuss its content. Full consideration has now been given to this letter, and his further letter of 27 April, and I have written to Mr. Mann today. I am sending copies of the correspondence to the hon. Gentleman.

Darius Guppy

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in what open prison establishment Darius Guppy has been held since beginning his prison sentence;

(2) for how long Darius Guppy was held in a closed prison establishment after he had been sentenced; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what security is given to Darius Guppy when he is allowed out of prison;

(4) what is the earliest date of release that Darius Guppy has been given following his sentence; and if he will make a statement;

(5) on how many occasions Darius Guppy has been allowed out of prison, and for what reasons, since commencing his prison sentence.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 20 May 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about Darius Guppy.

Since the beginning of his prison sentence Mr. Guppy has been held in three different open prisons; Kirkham, Standford Hill, and Ford. He was initially held in closed conditions for just over four weeks whilst his security category was assessed and allocation decided.

Mr. Guppy is classified as a category D prisoner. This means that he has been assessed as a person who can reasonably be trusted to serve his sentence in open conditions without absconding, and also that he is not considered to pose any threat to members of the public. Prisoners in category D who are granted temporary release are subject to licence conditions but are not generally subject to a physical escort. Failure to comply with the licence conditions is an offence under Prison Rules and may lead to a return to closed conditions as well as a delayed release date.

Since beginning his sentence on 25 March 1993 Mr. Guppy has been allowed out of prison on a total of 19 occasions, most of which have been for meetings with solicitors, counsel, insolvency consultants and appearances in court.

Unless he is granted parole on or after 12 August 1995, the earliest date for Mr. Guppy's release is 12 June 1996.

Drug Offenders

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been arrested for drug offences in public houses in the North Yorkshire area over the last five years.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not available.

Policemen (Attacks)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many attacks on policemen have occurred in the North Yorkshire area over the last five years.

Mr. Maclean: The available information relates to assaults on police and is published annually in the report of the chief constable for North Yorkshire, copies of which are available in the Library.

Drug-related Crime

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of crimes is estimated to be drugs related; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I would refer my hon. Friend the to reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham) on 16 May 1994, Official Report, column 337.

HEALTH

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give details of the number of national health service nursing and midwifery staff by pay grades within the groups of (a) senior nursing and midwifery staff, (b) education staff, (c) clinical nursing and midwifery staff, (d) learner, (e) other staff; and (f) Project 2000 nursing students, in each year since 1989; and if she will give the percentage change each year.

Mr. Sackville: The information available will be placed in the Library. The figures requested do not include practice nurses who contribute significantly to community nursing work. The number of practice nurses increased by 96·98 per cent. from 4,630 in 1989 to 9,120 in 1992.

Paracetamol

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in how many instances paracetamol has been mentioned on death records as a cause of death in each EEC country in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The available information for England and Wales is shown in the table.

Number of instances where paracetamol has been mentioned on death records as a cause of death, England and Wales, 1988-1992

	Number
1988	491
1989	458
1990	512
1991	544
1992	585

Information is not available centrally for European Economic Community countries.

Patients Charter

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost of the patients charter in each of the last three years.

Dr. Mawhinney: Implementation of patients charter rights and standards by the NHS has been at negligible cost; the charter is about doing things differently and does not need extra resources to implement.

GP Trainees

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors applied for general practitioner trainee posts in each of the last 10 years.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Civil Servants, London

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many civil servants were employed in London in each year since 1991-92.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Department of Health staff in London 1991-94
Wholetime equivalents as at 1 April

	Numbers
1991	3,016
1992	3,677
1993	3,719
1994	2,892

1. Numbers include inward loans and secondments, fixed term appointments and Agency staff in London.
2. Numbers exclude outward loans and secondments and casual staff.

Post-mortem Reports

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to ensure that general practitioners and hospital doctors receive post-mortem reports on their patients.

Mr. Sackville: Post mortems may be requested for clinical purposes, if relatives' permission is obtained, or by the coroner. Guidelines issued in August 1993 by the Royal College of Pathologists drew attention to the desirability of sending post mortem reports to general practitioners and hospital consultants, but noted the particular considerations where the post mortem has been requested by the coroner. The report is his property but the Coroners Rules 1984 provide for it to be supplied to those with a proper interest. Further consideration is being given to means of facilitating access to reports.

Contraceptive Services

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the number of patients in each year since 1983 for whom payment was due to general medical practitioners for the provision of contraceptive services.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Family Planning Clinics

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many family planning clinics there were, and how many women were seen by them, in each year since 1983.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the number of family planning clinics for the years 1983-87 is as follows:

Year	Number
1983	1,755
1984	1,768
1985	1,746
1986	1,756
1987-88	1,754

These statistics were not collected after 1987-88. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 5 May, Official Report, column 627-28, for information on the number of women seen in family planning clinics.

Child Vaccinations

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current take-up of child vaccinations; and what assessment she has made of the factors which lead some parents not to have children vaccinated.

Mr. Sackville: The Public Health Laboratory Service's latest "Cover of Vaccination Evaluated Rapidly" figures are:

93 per cent. of children have received diphtheria, tetanus and polio immunisations;
92 per cent. of children have received pertussis immunisation;
92 per cent. of children have received Hib immunisation(all at 12 months);
92 per cent. of children have received measles, mumps and rubella immunisation (at 24 months).

The figures show that there are not many children who remain unimmunised. The Health Education Authority has commissioned research with parents of very young children to find out why immunisations were not completed. The main reasons why parents decided not to complete immunisations are:

(i) loss of commitment after first born child;
(ii) perception that diseases are no longer serious;
(iii) perceived difficulty over access to services; and
(iv) vaccine safety.

Water Quality

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the benefits to health of a continuous high quality water supply.

Mr. Sackville: None. It is recognised that the availability of a supply of good quality drinking water is important for health and well-being.

Staff Statistics

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were employed in her Department and the NHS management executive in each year since 1989.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is shown in the table.

Department of Health and NHS Executive 1989-94 Whole-time Equivalents as at 1 April

Year	DH	NHS Executive[1]
1989	8,799	666
1990	5,388	797
1991	4,651	677
1992	4,803	776
1993	4,846	931
1994	4,690	838

[1] Figures are included in overall Department of Health numbers.
Notes:
1. Figures include inward loans and secondments, fixed term appointments and staff in Agencies.
2. Figures exclude casual staff and outward loans and secondments.

Poverty

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to investigate the relationship between poverty and ill health.

Mr. Sackville: "The Health of the Nation" White Paper noted that variations in health exist between different groups of the population and that these are associated with a wide range of factors—socio-economic, geographical, age, gender and others. The Chief Medical Officer has recently established a sub-group of his "Health of the Nation" working group to consider health variations in relation to the five key areas in the health strategy. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 12 May, Official Report, columns 217-18, which gives the terms of reference of the sub-group.

GP Fundholders

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has to review the use of general practitioner fundholders' savings;

(2) what plans she has to introduce new regulations for general practitioner fundholders.

Dr. Mawhinney: Ministers will be reviewing options for expanding and developing the fundholding scheme during the summer.

Travel and Subsistence Costs

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for 1993-94 the expenditure on travelling and subsistence for each (a) health authority and (b) national health service trust in England.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not yet available.

Mobile Telephones

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 6 May, Official Report, column 664, what was the cost of calls made on mobile telephones in 1993-94; how much this equipment cost to buy or hire; and what were the maintenance costs.

Mr. Sackville: The standing charges for mobile telephones in 1993-94 was £150,000 and the cost of calls made in the year was £152,000. All mobile telephones have been purchased over a period of several years; the average price paid in 1993-94 was £232, including value added tax. In view of the warranties provided and long-term reliability of this equipment, the Department has not entered into any maintenance contracts.

Health Trusts

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to whom those wishing to be considered for appointment to a health trust should apply; and if she will make a statement on the procedures to be followed.

Dr. Mawhinney: Those wishing to nominate themselves, or be nominated by others, should contact their regional health authority, which may also advertise for candidates from time to time. Regional health authorities are responsible for appraising and selecting candidates for recommendation to Ministers.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many tuberculosis tracing nurses are currently employed in the national health service, listed by district; and what has been the change in the number of such appointments in each year since 1982-83.

Mr. Sackville: It is not possible, from the data collected centrally, to identify those nurses specifically involved with tuberculosis tracing.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the unit cost of a single BCG vaccination to her Department.

Mr. Sackville: The cost is subject to commercial confidence.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) of 30 March, Official Report, column 890, if she will list by region those district health authorities which routinely offer BCG vaccinations to all new-born babies.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply, I gave the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) on 29 April, Official Report, column 370.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what advice the joint committee on vaccination and immunisation recommended in 1985 and 1990 on the continuation of the BCG schools immunisation programmes;

(2) what written instruction she has circulated to health authorities on restarting the school BCG vaccination programme.

Mr. Sackville: Following consideration by the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation, DA(85)27 was issued on 17 December 1985 recommending continuation of the schools' BCG programme. On 21 August 1990, EL(90)166 was issued following further consideration by the Joint Committee on Vaccination and immunisation recommending continuation of the programme at least until 1995-96 when a further review would take place. Copies of both letters are available in the Library.

In addition to the above, a reminder of the importance of the BCG immunisation programme has been brought to the attention of regional health authorities through the regional review process; regions have been asked to consider carefully whether their arrangements to protect against tuberculosis are adequate.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list members of the departmental task force for tuberculosis; and when the task force will submit a final report to her.

Mr. Sackville: The inter-departmental working group on tuberculosis will include officials from the Departments of Health, of Social Security, of Transport, of the Environment, the Home Department, the Department of Health and Social Security Northern Ireland Office, the Welsh Office and the Scottish Office Home and Health Department. There will also be a representative from the Public Health Laboratory Service and experts representing health care professionals.

The working group will oversee a number of sub-groups who will address the following issues:

the need for guidance on local control procedures;
screening of immigrants and refugees;
the impact of tuberculosis on the homeless;
the need to review prevention and control measures in prisons;
the need to review monitoring and surveillance mechanisms.

These groups will consist of officials from the interested Departments and others with expertise in the prevention and control of tuberculosis in each of these areas. Each sub-group will provide a paper for ministerial consideration with a final report giving key outcomes and recommendations. At this stage it is not possible to give a date for the final report.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of respiratory and non-respiratory tuberculosis have been notified via the Home Office to her Department in each year since 1985.

Mr. Sackville: It is not part of the notification procedures for the Home Department to provide the Department of Health with data on cases of tuberculosis.

Statutory notifications of tuberculosis are made by registered medical practitioners to the proper officer of the local authority or port health district. Reports of these notifications are sent to the Registrar General at the Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys.

Immigration Service officials have the power to refer for medical examination persons covered by the Immigration Act 1971 seeking to enter the United Kingdom. If any of these were found to have tuberculosis, notification would then be made to the proper officer of the relevant local authority or port health district.

The number of notifications of tuberculosis reported to the Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys for England and Wales during the years 1985-92 are shown in the table.

Notification of tuberculosis 1985-92, England and Wales
Tuberculosis (excluding chemoprophylaxis)

	Respiratory	Non-respiratory	Total
1985	4,660	1,197	5,857
1986	4,759	1,234	5,993
1987	4,010	1,076	5,086
1988	4,022	1,142	5,164
1989	4,146	1,286	5,432
1990	3,942	1,282	5,204
1991	3,950	1,486	5,436
1992	4,205	1,593	5,798

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the specific level of research funding allocated by her Department via the Medical Research Council into the prevention and cure of tuberculosis in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: The Medical Research Council is already funding a considerable amount of basic research into tuberculosis. The Department has not allocated any specific research funds via the MRC, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, into the prevention and cure of tuberculosis since 1979.

Public Expenditure

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 12 May, Official Report, columns 232-34, what were the principal causes of the difference between the figure for expenditure by the Department of Health of £29,950 million in 1993-94 and the equivalent figure of £30,090 million published in table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The main differences are an addition of £111 million, net, provided to meet a forecast increase in demand on the family health services and for hospital and community health services expenditure an underspend of £257 million. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the underspends of health authorities are eligible for carry forward into 1994-95.

Final outturn figures will be published in the appropriation accounts in the autumn.

Nursing Students

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing students took up places in each region in England in each year since 1990; and if she will make a statement on the likely level for 1994-95 assuming both volume and percentage changes.

Mr. Sackville: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as is available as soon as possible.

Research Projects

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cost of the research projects her Department has commissioned for the past five years; and what was the total cost of projects undertaken by staff employed by (a) universities and polytechnics, (b) independent research institutes, (c) health authorities, (d) management consultants and (e) other organisations, in each of those years.

Dr. Mawhinney: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as is available as soon as possible.

Hospital and Community Health Service Expenditure

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the level of current spending on the hospital and community health services for each national health service region and for the special health authorities, in each year since 1974-75 (a) in cash terms, (b) adjusted using the gross domestic product deflator and (c) adjusted using the national health service pay and prices index.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held in this form and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Surgical Procedures (Cost)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost of national health service procedures for (a) total hip replacement, (b) total knee replacement, (c) coronary artery bypass grafting, (d) mitral/aortic valve replacement, (e) hernia repair, (f) stripping of varicose veins, (g) hysterectomy, (h) tonsillectomy, (i) cataract extraction and lens implant, (j) heart transplant, (l) heart/lung transplant and (m) surgery for an enlarged prostate.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available. The costing systems used are currently under review to enable the methodologies used to be standardised in all hospitals.

Repairs and Maintenance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated expenditure required to clear the backlog of repairs and maintenance in each district health authority and national health service trust in England.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 1 November 1993, Official Report, column 64, for the latest available information.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued to ambulance service providers on the length of regular work shifts by (a) paramedic emergency services and (b) patient transport services; when this guidance was issued; whether it is under current review; and if copies of such guidance can be placed in the Library.

Mr. Sackville: No such guidance has been issued.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 16 May, Official Report, column 324, if she will show for each NHS trust by district health authority, those chairmen and non-executive directors who live outside the boundaries of the district health authority within which that trust is situated.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

TRANSPORT

Traffic Generation

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment has submitted its report on traffic generation; and what action he is planning to take.

Mr. Key: I received SACTRA's report on Wednesday 18 May. The issues covered are extremely complex, and a full response will be published in due course.

Seat Belts

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the benefits of the compulsory fitting of seat belts in (a) school coaches and (b) minibuses.

Mr. Key: I have now received the report of the review of the technical and cost implications of seat belt fitment in these vehicles. I hope to be able to announce the conclusions shortly.

Coach Safety

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the safety benefits of anti-crush zones in place of the rear seats of coaches.

Mr. Key: None.

Motorways

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the implications in terms of traffic volume of road pricing motorways for A and B roads.

Mr. Key: Research described in the Green Paper "Paying for Better Motorways" (Cm 2200) shows that substantial revenue could be raised at toll levels which would cause relatively little diversion to other roads. For example, charges of 1·5p per mile for cars and light goods vehicles and 4·5p per mile for other vehicles would raise some £7[illegible] million and might cause diversion of some 10 per cent. in terms of vehicle miles at peak periods. Further traffic modelling conducted since the Green Paper was published has broadly confirmed these estimates.

Rising congestion on a motorway network which was not improved quickly enough would of itself cause increasing diversion to other roads. Motorway charging offers the key to accelerating expansion of inter-urban road capacity, thereby reducing the diversion which would otherwise occur.

Accidents (Fatalities)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many child passengers have died in accidents involving (a) school coaches or (b) minibuses in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Key: It is not possible to identify school coaches or minibuses in the road injury accident data collection system. However, it is possible to identify school children in coaches and minibuses, during journeys to and from school, and also in other types of journey. Both these categories are included in the table along with children of school age, classified as school pupils, but not necessarily travelling in a school minibus on a school activity. The information requested is shown in the attached table.

School pupil[1] fatalities: by vehicle type: GB 1982-92

Casualties

	Minibus/ motor caravan	Bus or coach
1982	1	5
1983	0	2
1986	0	1
1988	7	0
1989	3	2
1990	3	1

[1] Aged 0-15.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to reduce the number of fatalities resulting from accidents involving coaches and minibuses.

Mr. Key: I have now received the report of the review of the technical and cost implications of seat belt fitment in these vehicles. I hope to be able to announce the conclusions shortly.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents in which children died in each of the last 10 years have been caused by excessive speed.

Mr. Key: The national road accident database includes only objective accident details. It does not include information on the cause of accidents and the information requested is not available.

Daylight Saving

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the road safety benefits of the adoption of daylight saving.

Mr. Key: The Transport Research Laboratory has estimated that a move to central European time would give a United Kingdom-wide net total reduction in road traffic casualties of 140 deaths, 520 serious injuries and 2,000 other casualties each year.

Road Traffic Accidents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of annual road traffic accidents occur on (a) A roads, (b) B roads and (c) motorways.

Mr. Key: In 1992, 47 per cent. of personal injury road traffic accidents occurred on A roads, 13 per cent. on B roads and 3 per cent. on motorways.

Crossrail Bill

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the nature of written or oral evidence given by, or on behalf of, his Department, to the Private Bill Committee considering the Crossrail Bill in respect of (a) cost restraint relative to protection of the environment or property, (b) difficulty or prohibition of through running to and from Heathrow airport and (c) obstacles to, or prohibition of links, in east London to the projected union railway.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport, for the Environment and for National Heritage submitted a report to the Committee on 14 July 1993. The Secretary of State for Transport submitted a further report on 15 October 1993. I gave evidence to the Committee on 16 March 1994 and a senior departmental official gave evidence to the Committee on 14 April 1994. In addition, a substantial amount of material relating to Government studies of the scheme was made available to the Committee on 11 April. On the same day a letter was sent to the Committee at official level on the subject of links to Union Railways.

None of the evidence given dealt specifically with the subject of cost restraint relative to protection of the environment or property, although broad estimates of the cost of land and property purchase and special works needed to protect buildings and restore worksites were made available in the copies of the studies referred to above. The Bill makes provision for a junction in the vincinity of Hayes, which would enable Crossrail trains to run through to Heathrow.

A substantial amount of written and oral evidence was given in respect of links to the second channel tunnel rail link. Transcripts of the oral evidence are of course available. The burden of the evidence was that the proposed link at Forest Gate/Ripple lane had been ruled out, but it remained open to the private sector promoters of the two railways to decide whether they wanted a connection and, if they did, to seek the necessary powers and to pay for it.

Trunk Road Assessment

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the report by the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment.

Mr. Key: Following past practice, SACTRA's report will be published when it has been fully considered, and the Government are ready also to publish their formal response.

Public Expenditure

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 12 May, Official Report, columns 232-34, what were the principal causes of the difference between the figure for expenditure by the Department of Transport of £6,010 million in 1993-94 and the equivalent figure of £6,150 million published in table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" in 1994-95; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The difference between the Department's latest estimated 1993-94 outturn and the forecast outturn last autumn which appears in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" is due principally to the following: deferred payment by BR of a substantial sum on railway rolling stock due to delayed entry into service, delays to the start of the Jubilee line extension and underspend on the Department's highways programme and reduced call on provision for BR pensions because of fewer than expected retirements.

Office of Passenger Rail Franchising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the contract issued by the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising to Shandwick plc for work as marketing consultants to the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising and his Department.

Mr. Freeman: No. The information requested is in confidence for commercial reasons.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list all meetings held between Ministers and officials in his Department and the Cabinet Office and all correspondence, in which was discussed the recruitment of marketing consultants by the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising, giving dates and persons involved, together with the nature of each meeting or item of correspondence;

(2) if he will list all meetings held or correspondence between any Ministers and officials in his Department and the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising at which recruitment of marketing consultants by the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising was discussed giving dates and persons involved;

(3) if he will publish a list of all Ministers or officials from his Department who attended presentations by prospective bidders, or who were sent for consultation bid documents by prospective bidders, for the post of marketing consultant to the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising and his Department, together with the dates of attendance or receipt of documents;

(4) if he will list all meetings held, or planned to be held, between Ministers and officials in his Department and Shandwick plc to discuss Shandwick's work as marketing consultants to the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising and his Department, giving dates and persons involved;

(5) if he will list all meetings and correspondence between Ministers or officials of his Department and the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising in which the recruitment of marketing consultants by the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising was discussed, giving dates and persons involved and the nature of each meeting or item of correspondence;

(6) if he will set out each stage of the process whereby Ministers or officials in his Department were consulted by the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising over the recruitment of marketing consultants by the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising; and at whose suggestion and on what date potential work for his Department was included within the brief sent to prospective bidders for this post.

Mr. Freeman: The Department appointed the marketing consultants Dewe Rogerson in March 1993 to advise on its marketing strategy for rail privatisation. The targets for the passenger franchising programme set by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 22 March 1994 shifted the focus of marketing activity. It was therefore sensible for Opraf to appoint marketing advisers. Officials agreed that the successful consultants would also work direct to the Department on any residual general rail privatisation marketing issues because it would not be right for Government to place different commissions for overlapping work.

Opraf appointed Shandwick Consultants Ltd. following an open competition which was entirely consistent with Cabinet Office guidelines. Officials of Opraf, the Department, the Central Office of Information and Samuel Montagu—merchant banking advisers—formed the sift and selection panels. Ministers were not involved in the selection. They were informed by officials after the selection panel had made its decision. Ministers' only involvement was in responding to a letter dated 19 April 1994 from the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras to Sir Robin Butler.

Dewe Rogerson has been given formal notice of the termination of its contract with the Department. Officials from both the Department and Opraf have since met with Shandwick to discuss the work programme. Ministers have not met Shandwick and have no current plans to do so.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all meetings held, or planned to be held, between the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising and Shandwick plc to discuss Shandwick's work as marketing consultants to the Office of Rail Franchising and his Department, giving dates and persons involved.

Mr. Freeman: A number of meetings with Shandwick are likely to be held separately by the Franchising Director, officials from Opraf and officials from my Department to discuss their work in connection with rail privatisation.

Rail Services

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will publish a list showing for all services provided under the timetables for each train operating unit and for each equivalent British Rail profit centre for the year 1994-95 relative to the year 1993-94 (a)

all services withdrawn completely, (b) all services with increased journey times and (c) all services with reduced stops at stations, naming the affected stations;

(2) if he will publish a table showing for services provided under the published timetables for each train operating unit and for each equivalent British Rail profit centre for the years 1993-94 and 1994-95 (a) the total number of train journeys run within each area, (b) the total number of trains operating within each area and (c) the total passenger capacity provided within each area, broken down by hour and day of the week.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Traffic Pollution

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest assessment of the effect of (a) lowest traffic forecasts and (b) highest traffic forecasts on the Government's commitment made at the United Nations conference on environment and development to reduce carbon dioxide levels to 1990 levels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The "low" and "high" traffic forecasts were taken into account when compiling the CO_2 projections for road transport and deciding on the measures which were announced in "Climate Change, the UK programme". Emissions from the transport sector, along with those from other sectors, are monitored so that any significant changes from expected trends that might persist for some time could be accomodated by revision of the measures in the programme. The four months since announcement of the strategy is too short a period in which to perceive significant deviations from trend projections.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Consultants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the expenditure on management and financial consultants by his Department in 1992-93.

Mr. Sproat: Total expenditure on consultancies in 1992-93 was £1·3 million.

Mobile Telephones and Pagers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) how many (a) portable telephones, (b) pagers and electronic bleepers and (c) car telephones are currently used by his Department; what are the annual costs of operating this equipment; and to which personnel it is made available;

(2) what was the cost of calls made on (a) car and (b) portable telephones in 1993-94; how much this equipment cost to buy or hire; and what were the maintenance costs.

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage currently has 17 portable telephones, nine pagers and two car phones in use. The cost of operating the above equipment in 1993-94 was £9,200 which included £2,000 pager line rental, £4,900 mobile/car phone line rental and £2,300 call charges. The total equipment cost in 1993-94 amounted to £800; there were no maintenance costs. The equipment is made available to Ministers, and officials where there is a requirement for mobile communications outside the office.

Departmental Expenditure

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 9 May, Official Report, column 13, in respect of his Department's estimated outturn expenditure, if he will account for the remainder of the administration costs excluding expenditure on premises, publicity and salaries.

Mr. Sproat: My reply of 9 May estimated expenditure of £12·7 million in respect of premises, publicity and salaries in my Department in 1994-95. Estimated expenditure on administration costs excluding these three elements is:

	£ million
Staff Related (eg travel and subsistence, recruitment)	1·5
Central Services (eg security, stationery)	1·4
Consultancies	1·2
Publications	0·5
Training/Conferences	0·7
IT/Telecommunications	1·7
Miscellaneous (eg Surveys, subscriptions, supplies/ printing)	0·6

In addition, administration costs of £700,000 for the Royal Fine Arts Commission and £1 million for the Millennium Commission are included in the Department's administration vote. A further £3 million is due to be transferred to the Central Satistical Office for costs on the international passenger survey.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on whether the conduct of the Rwandan Government is compatible with membership of the Security Council of the United Nations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The UN charter contains no provision regarding the expulsion of a member of the Security Council.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy in respect of a proposal for an emergency session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights on atrocities in Rwanda.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We supported the proposal for a special session of the UN Commission on Human Rights to discuss Rwanda. The session will take place on 24 and 25 May.

Human Rights

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries of the world where the treatment of human rights gives Her Majesty's Government cause for concern.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We monitor the human rights records of many countries world wide. Few have grounds for complacency over their respect for human rights.

Bosnia

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial support is received by the United Kingdom in connection with the placement of military personnel within the peacekeeping forces in Bosnia, other than expenditure by the British Government and the United Nations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None.

Italy

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the present Italian Government.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We intend to work closely and effectively with the present Italian Government across the range of issues where our Governments have mutual interests.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will reconsider his policy in respect of Her Majesty's Government's relations with Italy.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We see no reason to reconsider our policy towards relations with Italy, which are very good.

DEFENCE

Submarines (Radiation Emergencies)

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what instructions concerning radiation emergency procedures were issued or will be issued to local residents near submarine berths in (a) Glenmallen, (b) Portree, (c) Loch Goil, (d) Campbeltown, (e) Loch Ewe and (f) the Shetlands;

(2) when leaflets on what to do in a radiation emergency were issued or will be issued to local residents near submarine berths in Glenmallen, Portree, Lochgoil, Campbeltown, Loch Ewe and the Shetlands; if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: A booklet entitled "What to do in a Radiation Emergency", containing advice in accordance with the Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulations 1992, has been prepared for issue to those residents living within 550 m of such submarine berths.

This booklet was issued to residents living within 550 m of the berths at Loch Goil in June 1993 and at Campbeltown in January 1994, in co-operation with the local authority. Arrangements are currently in hand to issue booklets to residents living within the same distance of the berth at Glenmallen and the Shetland berth at Lerwick. No residents live within 550 m of the other berths listed. All of the berths in question are visited only infrequently.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the distance within which leaflets on what to do in a radiation emergency have been or will be issued to local residents near berths at the Clyde Submarine Base, Faslane and near submarine berths at Glenmallan, Portree, Loch Goil, Campbeltown, Loch Ewe and the Shetlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Booklets containing this advice have been, or will be, issued to residents living within 2,000 m at Faslane, where nuclear repairs take place, and 550 m at the other locations, which are only infrequently visited and where nuclear repairs are not undertaken.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the X and Z berths which may be used by nuclear-powered submarines at which leaflets to local residents as to what to do in a radiation emergency (a) have been issued, (b) will be issued in the near future and (c) are not planned to be issued.

Mr. Hanley: Booklets have been issued to local residents as to what to do in the unlikely event of a radiation emergency at the X-berths at Barrow-in-Furness, Devonport, Faslane and Rosyth and at the Z-berths at Campbeltown and Loch Goil. Arrangements are in hand to issue booklets to residents living within 550 m of the berths at Glen Mallan, Holy Loch and Lerwick in the event of a planned nuclear powered warship visit. There are no plans to issue leaflets to local residents at other Z-berths since no one resides within 550 m of the berth and there is therefore no requirement for issue.

Faslane

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the shiplift at Faslane will receive a full certification to lift a nuclear-powered submarine; and what alternative facilities are available for Vanguard class submarines.

Mr. Aitken: Following the successful completion of a nuclear audit earlier this month, work continues to prepare the shiplift for full authorisation for use. This involves finalisation of operating procedures, analysis and operator training. The shiplift is needed for docking maintenance purposes and no directly equivalent facilities are available elsewhere.

Recruitment

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total annual cost of recruitment for the services including advertising and careers information offices; and how many personnel were recruited in the last year.

Mr. Hanley: The total cost of recruitment, including advertising and careers information offices was £96,710,000 in financial year 1993-94, when 12,109 personnel entered the armed forces from civilian life.

Spent Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which type of commercial container is to be used in the short term for the transport of used fuel cores from naval reactors; how many containers have been or will be ordered; and what proportion of a naval used fuel core can be transported in one container.

Mr. Aitken: The two commercial containers will be supplied by Nuclear Transport Ltd. suitably licensed for the transportation of naval nuclear used fuel. It is not our practice to comment on the proportion of a naval fuel core transported in containers, though fewer fuel elements will be carried compared to the previous used core transportation packages.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when a contract will be placed for the design and procurement of purpose-built containers for the transport of used fuel cores from the naval reactors; when these containers are likely to enter service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 25 March, 1994, Official Report, column 469.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes to procedure for loading containers at the royal dockyards and at HMS Vulcan following the introduction of the use of existing commercial containers to transport used fuel cores from naval reactors; and what increase in the radiation doses received by service and civilian personnel will result; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The use of the commercial containers will not result in a change in general procedures. However, given the different size and geometry compared to the previous used core transportation packages some detailed changes will be necessary. No increase in radiation doses received by service and civilian personnel is expected.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when existing commercial containers will be introduced for the transport of used fuel cores from naval reactors; and from which site or sites they will be transporting used fuel cores.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 25 March 1994, Official Report, column 469. The containers will be used to transport used fuel from Devonport, Rosyth and the Naval Reactor Test Establishment, Dounreay.

Homosexual Service Personnel

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) on 5 May, Official Report, column 591, regarding homosexual service personnel, whether a copy of the letter from the Under-Secretary of State will be placed in the Library; and if he will make it his practice to include in such answers in the future a statement of his intention to put a copy of such letters in the Library.

Mr. Hanley: In accordance with established practice, a copy of the reply to the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) will be placed in the Library of the House.

Merchant Vessels (Chartering)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many British merchant vessels were chartered in each year since 1984 for United Kingdom national maritime exercises; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many British merchant vessels were chartered in each year since 1984 for multinational maritime exercises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Some 68 British merchant vessels have been chartered in support of multinational—NATO—maritime exercises as follows:

Year	Number of vessels
1984	11
1985	8
1986	8
1987	8
1988	8
1989	15
1990	3
1991	4
1992	Nil
1993	3
1994[1]	Nil

[1] To date.

From available records, three British merchant vessels were chartered in support of United Kingdom national maritime exercises in the same period: two in 1985 and one in 1990.

Afloat support for United Kingdom national maritime exercises is usually provided by the ships of the Royal Fleet Auxiliary Service. Additional vessels, if required, are obtained from the world-wide market on the basis of cost, availability and suitability, with as many shipowners as possible being notified of the requirement. Vessels for multinational—NATO—exercises are obtained in the same way.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent changes he has made to his procedures for chartering merchant vessels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My Department's arrangements for chartering merchant vessels are kept under constant review. Last August we placed a one-year ship broking services contract with the Baltic Exchange to cover most of our requirements. That contract is currently being reassessed.

Anglo-Eastern Maritime Ltd.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will name those ex-MOD personnel who have been employed by the firm Anglo-Eastern Maritime Ltd. after leaving his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: According to official departmental records, no ex-MOD personnel are employed by the firm Anglo-Eastern Maritime Ltd.

Lieutenant-Colonel Douglas Harding

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what posts the late Lieutenant-Colonel Douglas Harding held within his Department; and over what periods of time he held those posts.

Mr. Aitken: Lieutenant-Colonel Douglas Harding was commissioned in 1947 and served in the Royal Engineers and the Royal Corps of Transport until he was made redundant in April 1977. He was appointed to the retired officer grade of the civil service on 12 April 1977 and served as a staff officer within the Directorate of Movements (Army) in the Ministry of Defence until his death on 25 November 1990.

Hogg Robinson

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will name those ex-MOD personnel who have been employed by the firm Hogg Robinson after leaving his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Official Departmental records list one individual as being employed by Hogg Robinson. It is not the Department's policy to disclose the names of ex-employees.

Elite Shipping

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will name those ex-MoD personnel who have been employed by the firm Elite Shipping; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: According to official Departmental records, no ex-MoD personnel are employed by the firm Elite Shipping.

Research Establishments

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has held with the customers of proof and experimental establishment facilities in the United Kingdom as part of the current review.

Mr. Aitken: The director general test and evaluation review of test and evaluation facilities including the proof and experimental establishments involved widespread discussion within the Department, with interested trade associations and individual customers.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from customers of Pendine proof and experimental establishment on the effect of rationalisation of ranges in the United Kingdom on their trials planning.

Mr. Aitken: None.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of the effect of an increase in small arms testing and proofing activity at Shoeburyness proof and experimental establishment on noise levels in the Shoeburyness area;

(2) what assessment he has made of the comparative noise absorption of the topography around the proof and experimental establishments at Pendine and Shoeburyness.

Mr. Aitken: Detailed work of this nature would be performed if it is decided that a case for the move of these activities exists.

Second World War Commemorative Events

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is intended for Italy to be involved in next year's events to celebrate the end of the second world war.

Mr. Hanley: Plans for commemorative events to mark the 50th anniversary of the "End of the War in Europe" are being developed. They will be based on the theme of peace and reconciliation. Consideration is being given to which countries should be involved but no firm decisions have yet been made.

Mr. Paul Martin

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the appointment of Mr. Paul Martin to the Ministry of Defence as a permanent civil servant was referred to his Public Appointments Unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: No. Mr. Martin was appointed to the Ministry of Defence as a higher executive officer, development, a junior training grade. Such appointments are not referred to the public appointments unit.

Military Bands

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the costs and sources of finance for military bands for the last year for which figures are available; and what estimate he can make of the costs and their sources after the present reorganisation.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 13 May 1994]: The cost of Army music to departmental funds in 1993-94 was around £46 million. This covered the costs of manpower, phase 1 training, transport, and the running costs of the Royal Military school of music. It excluded the costs of basic and certain full dress uniforms, food, accommodation, travel and subsistence, which cannot be identified separately. All other items were funded at non-public expense. The annual cost to public funds of the smaller structure announced in March 1993 and to be implemented from 1 April 1995 is likely to be in the order of £30 million, which includes the costs of manpower, phase 1 training, transport, maintenance and insurance of uniforms and instruments, replacement instruments, and running the Royal Military school of music. The likely costs of food, accommodation, travel and subsistence cannot be identified separately. In addition, the cost of providing the new bands with instruments and appropriate uniforms will be met from public funds.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Departmental Publications

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for how many regular publications she was responsible for in 1993-94; what was their circulation; and how many were obtainable by subscription.

Mr. Jack: Details are set out in the Department's current publications catalogue. In addition, specialist statistical and fisheries publications are listed in separate catalogues. Copies of all three publications catalogues have been placed in the Library. Most publications are available on request either from the Department or through HMSO, and some are available on subscription. Of the regular publications where circulation details are kept centrally, the numbers involved are as follows:

State Veterinary Journal—quarterly, 5,000 copies.

Food Safety Directorate Information Bulletin—monthly, 3,000 copies.

Survey News (for users of Government dietary survey data) —twice a year, 300 copies.

Flood and Coastal Defence R & D Newsletter—twice a year, 3,000 copies.

Campaign Against Illegal Poisoning of Wildlife Newsletter —quarterly, 2,000 copies.

Race Bank

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in finding alternative sources of sand for flood defence works other than source extraction from Race Bank; what environmental impact studies are continuing in respect of sand extraction from Race Bank; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The National Rivers Authority has sought tenders for the supply of sand for the Lincolnshire sea defences in 1994 from a range of sources, including existing licensed areas as well as Race Bank. Those tenders are now being evaluated before decisions are made on the source of material to be used in this year's operations.

A substantial environmental assessment programme has already been completed in respect of the Race Bank and the outstanding results of the Hull university studies relating to the seasonal variability of crab populations and marine environmental conditions in and around the area of Race Bank will be available later this year. Those results will inform decisions to be made about the source of sand to be used in the Lincolnshire sea defences in 1995 and subsequent years.

WALES

Steel Industry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future prospects for the Welsh steel industry.

Mr. Redwood: Following substantial investment over the last decade, the Welsh steel industry is in a strong position to take advantage of increasing demand resulting from improving economic prosperity in the United Kingdom and overseas.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance and additional resources he will give to the training and enterprise councils to encourage training of craftsmen for the construction industry.

Mr. Redwood: Training and enterprise councils have responsibility for planning and arranging Government-funded training in the light of their knowledge of local labour markets. I have allocated sufficient resources in 1994-95 to enable the TECs to meet their training plans.

GCSE

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of pupils who re-sat GCSE in English and mathematics last November in each county; and how many of these in each county achieved A to C grades.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not available, as data collected about candidates who are entered for GCSE examinations do not include how many previous attempts the candidate has made at a particular subject.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of pupils who re-sat GCSE last summer in each county; and how many achieved A to C grades.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not available, as data collected about candidates who are entered for GCSE examinations do not include how many previous attempts the candidate has made.

Health Promotion Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the report by the South Wales area office of the district audit service of the Audit Commission into the allegations of malpractice by Professor Catford, the former chief executive of the Health Promotion Authority for Wales.

Mr. Redwood: No. Publication of the report could prejudice possible legal proceedings.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Health Promotion Authority for Wales in relation to the reinstatement of Mr. David Griffiths to the audit committee of the authority.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Health Promotion Authority for Wales in relation to the recovery of sums owing to it from its former chief executive in respect of work commissioned by other authorities carried out in the authority's time and travel expenses.

Mr. Redwood: The chairman and officials of my Department have kept in close touch on this matter. The authority has already set in hand action to recover certain moneys it believes to be owing from Dr. Catford.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will specify the level of supplementary credit approvals to be allocated to the residuary body for Wales in the (a) present financial year and (b) 1995-96.

Mr. Redwood: A final decision on funding the residuary body for 1994-95 has not yet been taken. If the residuary body were to be set up in January 1995, I would envisage issuing a supplementary credit approval of about £70,000. We have no plans to make a supplementary credit approval available to the residuary body for 1995-96.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he expects to announce the name of (a) the chairman and (b) membership of the board of the residuary body for Wales; and what guidelines he has issued with respect to previous local government experience for such memberships.

Mr. Redwood: If the residuary body were to be established in January 1995 I would expect to announce the chairman and members in December 1994. I have not issued any guidelines as yet, but as my right hon. Friend said in Standing Committee A on 17 May 1994 there would be a need for members with property expertise and experience of local government.

Whitbread Round the World Yacht Race

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation in relation to the setting of an upper limit to the expenditure of public money that the corporation and other Welsh Office sponsored quangos on the resourcing of a Welsh Challenge in the Whitbread round the world yacht race.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Grant-maintained Status

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has had to take action in respect of any local authority in Wales which has issued misleading information about grant-maintained status.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There have been several instances where it has been suggested that the information being made available by local education authorities to schools that were considering grant-maintained status or where parents were about to ballot on grant-maintained status, was incorrect and misleading. There has, however, been only one instance to date where there has been sufficient firm evidence that the information was misleading, to justify intervention by the Welsh Office.

Some schools in Dyfed have been advised by their LEA that should a school successfully apply to become grant-maintained, both teaching and non-teaching staff working at the school would have no security of employment and would be required to apply to the grant-maintained governing body for their own jobs. That is clearly incorrect. The contracts of employment of staff who work only at the school transfer automatically from the former employer to the school's governing body on the day the school takes on its new status. Officials wrote to Dyfed county council to correct this misunderstanding and the letter was copied to all head teachers in Dyfed as well as other directors of education.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many parliamentary questions, in the period November 1992 to March 1993, were answered with the response that the information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost; how many were referred on to an agency chief executive; and, in each case, what percentage of the total number of questions asked this constituted.

Mr. Heseltine: According to the POLIS database, 14 parliamentary questions answered by Ministers in this Department in the period 1 November 1992 to 31 March 1993 were replied to in terms that the information was not held centrally or that the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Fourteen questions were referred to agency chief executives during the same period. Both of these figures represent less than 1 per cent. of written answers given by my Department during the period.

Company Investigations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when the inspectors to inquire into the affairs of Furdrove Ltd. were appointed; when their inquiry was completed; what are the business connections of the inspectors; what is the cost of the investigation; how it has been disbursed to each inspector; what reports have been published; and when he will publish the final reports;

(2) when the inspectors to inquire into the affairs of Signal Life Assurance Co. Ltd. were appointed; when their inquiry was completed; what are the business connections of the inspectors; what is the cost of the investigation; how it has been disbursed to each inspector; what reports have been published; and when he will publish the final reports;

(3) when the inspectors to inquire into the affairs of Pharmaceutex (IV Fluid) Ltd. were appointed; when their inquiry was completed; what are the business connections of the inspectors; what is the cost of the investigation; how it has been disbursed to each inspector; what reports have been published; and when he will publish the final reports;

(4) when the inspectors to inquire into the affairs of Riafield Ltd. were appointed; when their inquiry was completed; what are the business connections of the inspectors; what is the cost of the investigation; how it has been disbursed to each inspector; what reports have been published; and when he will publish the final reports.

(5) when the inspectors to inquire into the affairs of Corporate Planning Management Ltd. were appointed; when their inquiry was completed; what are the business connections of the inspectors; what is the cost of the investigation; how it has been disbursed to each inspector; what reports have been published; and when he will publish the final reports;

(6) when the inspectors to inquire into the affairs of Hartley Baird plc were appointed; when their inquiry was completed; what are the business connections of the inspectors; what is the cost of the investigation; how it has been disbursed to each inspector; what reports have been published; and when he will publish the final reports;

(7) when the inspectors to inquire into the affairs of Allied Suppliers (Ireland) Ltd. were appointed; when their inquiry was completed; what are the business connections of the inspectors; what is the cost of the investigation; how it has been disbursed to each inspector; what reports have been published; and when he will publish the final reports;

(8) when the inspectors to inquire into the affairs of Drivehouse Ltd. were appointed; when their inquiry was completed; what are the business connections of the inspectors; what is the cost of the investigation; how it has been disbursed to each inspector; what reports have been published, and when he will publish the final reports;

(9) when the inspectors to inquire into the affairs of Cubar Construction Company Ltd. were appointed; when their inquiry was completed; what are the business connections of the inspectors; what is the cost of the investigation and how it has been disbursed to each inspector; what reports have so far been published; and when he will publish the final reports.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: All inspectors were Department officers and the costs of their investigations are not available. Decisions not to publish their reports were all taken before 1990. The further information requested by the hon. Member is set out in the table.

Company	Date of appointment of inspectors	Date of Report
Allied Suppliers (Ireland Ltd.)	14 August 1978	29 April 1983
Riafield Ltd.	24 August 1981	30 December 1983
Corporate Management Planning Ltd.	11 November 1981	24 September 1986
Pharmaceutex (IV Fluid) Ltd.	25 March 1982	4 June 1986
Drivehouse Ltd.	—	—
Furdrove Ltd.	—	—
Cubar Construction Ltd.	10 May 1982	28 August 1984
Signal Life Assurance Co. Ltd.	19 November 1982	16 November 1988

Consultants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the expenditure on management and financial consultants by his Department in 1992-93.

Mr. Eggar: Expenditure committed to consultants in the financial year 1992-93 was £36 million. That figure does not include contracts let independently by the Department's executive agencies.

China (Forced Labour)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures his Department has taken to ensure that no products from forced labour camps in China are imported into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Needham: With limited exceptions, the importation into the United Kingdom of goods produced in any foreign prison or like establishment is banned by the Foreign Prison-Made Goods Act 1897, as amended in 1988. Enforcement of the Act is a matter for Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, which depends on receiving sufficient evidence, specific to the consignment concerned.

Warren Spring Laboratory Staff

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many of the original staff at Warren Spring Laboratory have transferred to AEA Technology Ltd.

Mr. Heseltine: Some 85 Warren Spring Laboratory staff transferred to AEA Technology.

Dounreay

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantities of (a) the core fuel and (b) the breeder blanket have been reprocessed annually at the Dounreay nuclear power development establishment for (i) the prototype fast reactor and (ii) the Dounreay fast reactor since each was commissioned; and where the arising plutonium is now stored or has been put to use.

Mr. Eggar: An average of 19·2 PFR core fuel elements have been reprocessed annually and in the last year PFR breeder reprocessing commenced with 148 elements being reprocessed. An average of 576 DFR core fuel elements were reprocessed annually up to 1977 but no DFR breeder elements have been reprocessed. The plutonium arising from this reprocessing is stored under international safeguards at BNFL's Sellafield site. Some of the plutonium arising from reprocessing has been recycled into new fast reactor fuel which has been used to generate electricity.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantities of (a) core fuel and (b) breeder blanket nuclear material remain inside prototype and demonstration fast reactors at Dounreay; and what proposals there are for reprocessing or direct disposal of both the core and breeder blanket from each reactor.

Mr. Eggar: There are 83 core fuel elements and 34 breeder elements remaining inside PFR and 977 breeder elements and no core elements remaining inside DFR. Regarding proposals for reprocessing, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Simpson) on 18 May 1994, Official Report, column 469.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he has given to the options for the disposal of radioactive wastes from AEA Technology sites in light of the recent report of the Advisory Committee on the Safety of Nuclear Installations.

Mr. Eggar: The disposal of radioactive wastes from UKAEA sites is the responsibility of UKAEA management. However, frequent discussions of the options have taken place between the UKAEA and officials from my Department both before and since the recent report of the Advisory Committee on the Safety of Nuclear Installations recent report.

RECOD Conference

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish in the Official Report a summary of the Minister for Energy's address to the RECOD 1994 international conference on nuclear fuel reprocessing and waste management, held in London on 24 to 28 April; and if he will place in the Library a copy of the address.

Mr. Eggar: I have placed a copy of my speech opening the RECOD conference in the Library of the House.

Energy Resources

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what access exists for United Kingdom companies and research organisations to the SESAME database on energy resources operated by the European Commission's Directorate-General for Research and Development.

Mr. Eggar: The SESAME database may be accessed on-line from EUROBASES—the European Commission's agent—and via a diskette of SESAME available from Infopartners and a CD-ROM version obtainable from Longman World.

Mobile Telephones

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 9 May, Official Report, column 15, what was the cost of calls made on mobile telephones in 1993-94; how much this equipment cost to buy or hire; and what were the maintenance costs.

Mr. Eggar: As stated in my reply of 9 May, records are no longer kept centrally of all uses of mobile telephones. However, using the same basis as before it is estimated that call charges in respect of the mobile telephones in use in my department, excluding "next steps" agencies, were around £91,000 in 1993-94.

The equipment in use was bought over the last three years or so at an annual average cost in the region of £45,000. It is not my Department's general policy to take out maintenance contracts on mobile telephones but the costs of repairs and new batteries are estimated to be in the region of £10,000 per annum.

Motor Vehicles Block Exemption System

Mr. Dykes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the progress being made in Government discussions with the European Commission on the motor vehicles block-exemption system renewal.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Government are awaiting the Commission's proposals to amend and renew the block exemption. When these are received, officials will consult relevant parties in the United Kingdom motor trade.

Public Expenditure

Ms Harman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade pursuant to the answer of 12 May, Official Report, columns 232-34, what were the principal causes of the difference between the figure for expenditure by the Department of Trade and Industry of £3,340 million in 1993-94 and the equivalent figure of £3,630 million published in table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The figures shown in table 5B.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1994-95 and on 12 May, Official Report, columns 232-34 for trade and industry expenditure include expenditure by nationalised industries and regulatory departments as well as the Department of Trade and Industry. The principal cause of the difference between the two figures is a reduction in estimated expenditure by British Coal reflecting reduced capital expenditure and tighter control of operating costs. The figures shown on 12 May are subject to revision and may differ from the figures eventually published in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1995-96.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 243

SESSION 1993–94

9th May—20th May 1994

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
